

Obama's take on the Union

President addressed Congress, but spoke to the people

By TED ANTHONY
The Associated Press

At a harrowing national moment, Franklin D. Roosevelt commandeered the young airwaves for a "fireside chat" with the American people — a candid talk about big troubles and how to fix them. He was confident and strong, a father figure to a nation that was losing its way.

"My friends," said Roosevelt, freshly inaugurated, "I want to talk for a few minutes with the people of the United States about banking."

On Tuesday night, three quarters of a century later, Barack Obama stepped up to a less intimate but equally high-stakes version of the national fireplace to do the same thing: talk a good game, draw us a map back toward prosperity and "speak frankly and directly to the men and women who sent us here."

Many chief executives have spoken directly with the American people since FDR's era, and an address to Congress is hardly an intimate radio talk. No president, however, has faced a context so similar. Never have the words felt so aimed at soothing Americans who are scared, broke, roused from their homes, uncertain about the future of their lives and nation.

Facing lawmakers and Americans by the millions, Obama traded doomsaying for optimism and invoked an American chestnut — the tenacity of hope.

"We will rebuild, we will recover. And the United States of America will emerge stronger than before," he said.

But do we believe him? As in Roosevelt's time, comforter-in-chief is only one hat of many. On Tuesday, though, it seemed to fit.

"He exudes a kind of self-confidence that I don't think we've had for a long time. He kind of carries you along with it," said Terry Swihart of Wakarusa, Ind., who has been laid off twice in the past year — once from a job she held for 28 years. Her husband also lost his job.

Despite her approval, Swihart added this caveat: "I hope it's not just rhetoric."

That is always the fear, particularly for a president whose eloquence was targeted in the campaign as evidence of his disingenuousness. The words Obama chose — empathizing with Americans while also addressing Congress — were the language of hope but also of tough love.

Americans, the president insisted, were ready. He addressed a nation that he insisted does not shy away from challenges — it's in our spirit — and demanded action not only from government but from the people.

What's more, he acknowledged that progress will not be immediate — bad news for an instant-gratification culture but something that Jaime Silahua, watching the speech in the San Francisco suburb of Antioch, understood well.

Silahua is on the front lines of the tanking economy.

Golden moment for Special Olympians

By CHIYOMI SUMIDA
Stars and Stripes

CHATAN, Okinawa — Trickery was a secret to a Japanese team's win of a gold medal in floor hockey at the 2009 Special Olympics World Winter Games in Boise, Idaho.

Coach Takeshi Zukeran, 34, revealed Tuesday during a meeting of the Okinawa chapter of Special Olympics Japan that he tricked his team into thinking the final game was just another semifinal match. He didn't want them feeling too pressured to win.

"When I told them that we won the gold medal, everybody started to cry for joy," he said. "It is a great reward to see each team member grow stronger, both physically and mentally."

The team was formed in 2002 by volunteer American service-members, said Chip Steitz, chairman of the chapter's finance and public relations committee.

Six members of Japan's 14-member "Team Sakura" floor hockey squad are from Okinawa.

Floor hockey was one of the most popular of the seven sports featured at the games earlier this month, with more than 80 teams competing in the event. The games also featured Alpine skiing, cross-country skiing, figure skating, snowboarding, snowshoeing and speed skating.

"I was happy because we had a great time together," said a smiling Hitoshi Noho, 37, the floor hockey team's goalkeeper.

Throughout the years, donations from Americans and U.S. military base groups have played a key role in outfitting the team, Steitz said.

Steitz was awarded a certificate of appreciation at the meeting, where he praised the player's efforts.

"The team's achievement was incredible," Steitz said. "Through our journey, we have made a difference to hundreds if not thousands of special-needs athletes and artists living on Okinawa."

Obama: Listening to speech 'gave me more confidence'

OBAMA, FROM PAGE 1

Antioch has been hit hard by foreclosures, and housing values have dropped by 50 percent in many neighborhoods. Silahua's house, which he bought for $281,000 seven years ago, is now valued, he believes, at about $89,000. He is fighting a bank eviction.

So Obama's plan is, for him, a bit more abstract: "His initiatives are good — they just probably won't help me at this point."

That is often the problem when grand national themes collide with the building blocks of people's lives and bank accounts. Obama invoked the vaunted American optimism and said that yes, another American century was possible. But it can be a hard sell for folks who lie awake at 2 a.m. with the stomach-churning realization that the creditors will be calling at dawn.

When FDR started his fireside chats in the depths of the Depression, hope was a scarce commodity — even more scarce than it is today. The new president, eight years before World War II began, reassured Americans with a voice that was "authoritative but not autocratic, persuasive but not coercive," FDR biographer Jonathan Alter wrote.

That was, of course, long before Vietnam and Watergate and the deep distrust in government that they begat.

Jody Baugh, an unemployed Indiana welder, offers the modern equivalent of the warm reception that many Americans gave FDR's chats. Baugh was hungry for hope and, he said, Obama delivered.

"He didn't come across as a used-car salesman," Baugh said. "He came across as someone who legitimately cared about people like me."

"This is the first time I ever watched the whole speech of any president," Baugh said. "I didn't get up at all. It gave me more confidence. I thought, 'At least I've got somebody who is more on my side than before.'"

And though one-third of the nation's history separates them, Obama and Roosevelt shared one thing above all else as they addressed Americans about the economy at the beginning of their presidencies. Each demanded action — not only from government but from we, the people.

Said Roosevelt in 1933: "It is your problem no less than it is mine."

Said Obama in 2008: "The time to take charge of our future is here."

On a rural road in the hot, dry countryside of Thailand, a dozen protesters shout, "No! No! No!"

Using only a fallen tree and their bodies, they face off against a wall of elbow-linked Thai soldiers tasked to escort a World Food Programme convoy of food, water and supplies to a humanitarian distribution encampment.

It is almost believable.

The protesters are Asian troops in civilian clothes and locally hired role players. As a Royal Thai Army negotiator speaks calmly to the crowd leader, several try to dash through the security line. A few are tackled hard to the pavement. Others lay prone on the middle of the road, moaning in pretend agony.

Just a few feet away, Lt. Gen. Benjamin Mixon, U.S. Army Pacific commanding general, smiles.

It has taken weeks for these combined teams to prepare for this Global Peacekeeping Operations Initiative. Only six U.S. noncommissioned officers are here, with a handful of U.N. advisers. Their job is to train the trainers in foreign militaries.

"They're just there to help the students," said Command Sgt. Maj. Michael Thomas, a training designer who was commandant of the NCO Academy-Hawaii. The idea of junior ranks giving orders remains a big cultural leap in Asian militaries that draw a hard line between officers and enlisted men.

In this scenario, the WFP wants no military onboard its vehicles. But Asian armed forces are used to being in charge of aid convoys, Thomas explained. It's a challenge these trainees will face in the real world, where militaries frequently have to negotiate how far to keep away from aid vehicles.

At a barbed-wired encampment farther down the road, ex-combatants have come to lay down their arms and return to society. An English-speaking Thai soldier beckons a civilian woman to rise from her knees and pass the gate. Inside, a man holding a cardboard TV news camera tries to record a detainee processing, which is not allowed. A Thai soldier pushes him back firmly but politely.

Suddenly, the bang of a flash grenade pierces the quiet and a speeding white pickup truck drives by, rebels firing blanks from automatic weapons. Thais hit the dirt, green smoke fills the air, and the soldiers return fire.

The event reminds Mixon of his service in Colombia, where members of the United Self-Defense Forces of Colombia (AUC) and the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia (FARC) gave up their arms.

"The hard part is always reintegration," Mixon said, and setting up what amounts to vocational training.

When a combatant lays down his arms, "you have to house the family, you've got to feed them — it takes maybe a year or more to get them some kind of skill. Well, that's a huge investment," he said. A political decision has to be made, "whether you're going to fight these guys for 40 years or reintegrate them into society."

Political decisions are on Mixon's mind often, 8,000 miles from the Pentagon; particularly, those that will direct the coming shift in fighting to the Afghanistan-Pakistan border.

"I think everyone recognizes that it has to be done," Mixon said solemnly.

But the military's role there must be better defined, he added, and the U.S. Agency for International Development and State Department components must be stepped up.

"From a strategic perspective and a soft power perspective, that's something that the U.S. has got to expand," he said.

After serving in Iraq and South America, Mixon knows the limitations of a military's ability to affect the behavior of civilian populations.

Bill would simplify relocation for spouses

By LEO SHANE III
Stars and Stripes

WASHINGTON — Cindy Maurer is living in Maryland right now, but she doesn't have any idea what state really counts as her home.

"We've moved 10 times in 18 years," the Navy wife said. "I'm a physical therapist, and have a professional license in Mississippi, California, Maryland, Hawaii and Virginia. I have a driver's license in my purse that's from Hawaii, but I'm a voter in Maryland now."

"I'm spinning just thinking about everything I have to do every time we have to move."

Under federal law, servicemembers who move from state to state on military assignments can keep their home state residency if they so choose, allowing them to avoid switching driver's licenses, voting privileges and tax status.

But military spouses who join them can't. Maurer said with each move she's had to research new state residency laws to figure out how to register the couple's cars, where to file their taxes and dozens of other tasks.

"And that's on top of the stress of moving," she said.

On Wednesday, Maurer and other military spouses gathered in Washington to back legislation sponsored by Rep. John Carter, R-Texas, that would change those rules, allowing spouses to keep the same state of residence as their servicemembers for their entire military career.

The measure wouldn't solve all the headaches — Maurer would still have to get professional licenses in every state where she works, for example — but the spouses said it would eliminate dozens of other switches they have to make but their servicemembers do not.

Carter called the inequity "an egregious error" that lawmakers need to correct; the statute governing military spouses' residency hasn't been updated since 1940.

Joanna Williamson, a Navy wife who brought the issue to Carter last year, said the current rules aren't simply a minor inconvenience for families as they move from place to place.

Often spouses will register cars or homes only in their servicemember's name to avoid fees and filing in multiple states, she said. If the couple divorces, the spouse could be left with nothing.

"The spouse earned that property, and they need to have that protection," she said. "So it becomes an issue of fairness and equality in the relationship. I have a job. I own a vehicle. I should be able to put that in my name."

Late last year Carter introduced similar legislation that passed the House but never came up for a vote in the Senate. He said he believes bringing up the issue early in the year will give him the time needed to collect enough supporters for passage, and has already received support on the Senate side for the proposal.

Tameka Gabriel, a Navy wife who drove from North Carolina to D.C. for the event, said she's hopeful the changes can be passed this year.

"Everything is just a long process," she said. "This would just take away so much of the grief that comes with making a move."

Cobra: High operational tempo has strained regular training efforts

"Military is a means to a political end," he said. The question he asks himself is: "What is the political end going to be?"

"I think that will change in the next few months," he said with confidence.

Stretched thin

In the Chiang Mai combined joint staff headquarters, Cobra Gold leaders say that even at the command level, training has strained under the pressures of constant warfare.

"It's a testament to our soldiers and leaders that we're able to pull this off," said Hansen.

The Army's transformation to a smaller, more expeditionary-based structure, which was launched after 9/11, included the authorization to stand up a fully deployable Operational Command Post, or OCP, in each of the five service component commands theaters, including U.S. Army Pacific.

But that plan was created in an environment far different from what exists today, explained Col. Sean Callahan, 46, from Norwalk, Conn., the current operations officer for the OCP out of Fort Shafter, Hawaii.

To date, USARPAC's OCP has only deployed twice, to the Japanese exercise "Yama Sakura" in 2007 and 2008, and in neither instance at full strength.

"We deploy a core element, a fraction of what we're authorized," said Callahan, who brought the OCP to Cobra Gold for the first time this year. "We haven't been able to resource it like we originally intended. So we have something much less than that, right now. Something that can keep the lights on."

Until help arrives, military trainers are forced to adjust to the demands handed to them.

"Training management is really being challenged throughout the Army because of the operational tempo and the commitment to the war, there's no question," Callahan said.

One casualty has been the Army's "Eight-Step Training Model," he explained. "It's what you'd like to do. It's what you try to do. But it ends up being less than perfect because of lack of time and lack of people."

"Back in the good old Cold War days, you had a fairly predictable stable cycle throughout the year. I could tell you a year from now, as a company commander, when I was going to be in a down cycle, when I was going to be in an intense training cycle, [and] when I would be in a support cycle," Callahan said. "Here, you're challenged to do any of that because of the personnel constraints, because of the demands of the war."

The colonel said he is encouraged that the Army is looking at fundamental changes to the training tempo.

"We've gone through multiple iterations of 'What do we do now?' based on the changed situation and we're still working through that," said Callahan.

But the Army never has recovered from the assumptions behind the original transformation plan.

In the meantime, Callahan defended holding exercises like Cobra Gold, no matter how difficult.

"Look, you've got to pay attention to the Pacific. There are plenty of terrorist organizations, not just in the Middle East but throughout Asia and the Pacific region," he said.

One briefing slide Callahan put together shows 14 terrorist organizations over the map of Southeast Asia. "And that's not exhaustive," he said.

Army dropping additional re-up bonus

By JEFF SCHOGOL
Stars and Stripes

ARLINGTON, Va. — The Army has ended an additional re-enlistment bonus that targeted soldiers whose contracts were set to expire this fiscal year after exceeding its retention goal.

More than 7,900 soldiers who had been slated to leave the Army before Oct. 1 have re-enlisted this fiscal year, beating the Army's target by more than 700 soldiers, said Master Sgt. Michael Beaupre, retention operations noncommissioned officer in the directorate of military personnel management.

The total number of soldiers eligible for the bonus was not available Tuesday, said Sgt. Maj. Dean Drummond, senior Army career counselor.

In December, the Army announced that soldiers slated to leave active duty by Oct. 1 could be eligible to receive a re-enlistment bonus of up to $18,500.

That bonus was not part of the latest Armywide message outlining the Selective Re-Enlistment Bonus-Enhanced Program.

The message was issued Feb. 13 and became effective Feb. 20.

Asked why soldiers were given only a week's notice that the bonus was going away, Beaupre said that the Army announced in December that the re-enlistment bonus program could change any time after Feb. 2.

The move comes about two months after the Army reduced the number of Military Occupational Specialties that rate a re-enlistment bonus from 88 to 63. Its budget for retention bonuses this fiscal year has been cut by $90 million, and more cuts are possible.

Meanwhile, the Army is expected to meet its goal of increasing its active-duty end strength to 547,000 this year.

Army Vice Chief of Staff Gen. Peter Chiarelli recently said the Army's recruiting efforts began seeing increased success in December 2007, which he has heard coincided with the economic crisis.

Army officials will look at whether the service needs to offer so many retention bonuses given current economic conditions, Chiarelli told reporters last month.

"They've got to go ahead and look at those and tell us whether or not we have to offer the same bonuses today that we've offered in the past," he said.

Care for brain trauma rising at Walter Reed

By LEO SHANE III
Stars and Stripes

WASHINGTON — Doctors at Walter Reed Army Medical Center are treating fewer torso and limb injuries in troops returning from combat but more brain trauma and psychological disorders, the top Pentagon health official said Wednesday.

Ward Casscells, assistant secretary of defense for health affairs, said that's largely due to the drop in violence in Iraq, and could reverse as fighting intensifies in Afghanistan in coming months.

But he also credited better recognition of brain injuries by doctors and a lessening of the stigma associated with some psychological diagnoses. For example, physicians saw an increase in the number of patients reporting symptoms of depression over the last year.

"Guys are telling us they would still much rather be diagnosed with traumatic brain injury than post-traumatic stress disorder," Casscells said. "But we're getting at some of that stigma. We've reduced it a bit."

"And as we increase dwell time, we hope to see decreases in those numbers as well."

More than 80 percent of "wounded warrior" patients at Walter Reed are dealing with traumatic brain injuries, post-traumatic stress disorder, concussion complications and similar wounds, hospital officials said.

On Tuesday, Casscells and other military health experts toured the facility to see changes made in the two years since a Washington Post investigative report found poor living conditions and frustrating regulations for some patients.

Commander Col. Norvell V. Coots touted improvements in communication with patients and living quarters but acknowledged that more than half of patients still complain about difficulties getting timely appointments with their doctors.

"In the civilian sector you have your doctor ... but when you call here, Dr. Jones may be in Iraq or Afghanistan or assigned somewhere else," he said. "So we're trying to get to a team approach to help address that."

"But they want to make an appointment quickly, and we need to do better to help with that."

Coots said Walter Reed officials are also surveying patients regularly to better gauge their complaints and will have front-desk "greeters" on call around the clock starting next month to provide more access to help for troops and their families.

Casscells said he's pleased with the improvements thus far, noting that most of the feedback he receives from patients now during regular visits focuses on improving family housing on campus.

DOD officials keep quiet on budget talks

By JEFF SCHOGOL
Stars and Stripes

ARLINGTON, Va. — The first rule of the defense budget is you do not talk about the defense budget.

At the request of Defense Secretary Robert Gates, top defense officials have signed a nondisclosure agreement prohibiting them from talking about the budgeting process, said Pentagon Press Secretary Geoff Morrell.

"This is highly sensitive stuff, involving programs costing tens of billions of dollars, employing hundreds of thousands of people, and [going] to the heart of our national security," Morrell told reporters Wednesday.

Gates himself has signed the nondisclosure agreement, which is meant to foster an atmosphere of candor among those crafting the defense budget by reassuring them that their conversations will not be leaked, Morrell said.

"Ultimately, this product ... [has] got to be judged as a whole, so if bits and pieces leak out, you start to tug on these strings, and the whole thing could unravel," he said.

The need for secrecy especially applies to aspects of the budget that might not be classified, Morrell said.

"If, indeed, not all the materials that this gang is working with are marked secret, or are classified, and therefore For Official Use Only, all the more reason for a nondisclosure agreement, so that those matters cannot be discussed as well," he said.

This is the first time Gates has had defense officials sign such an agreement, Morrell said.

Top U.S. officials have hinted that over-budget weapons systems could be on the chopping block as the Defense Department looks to cut costs.

"We'll eliminate the no-bid contracts that have wasted billions in Iraq, and reform our defense budget so that we're not paying for Cold War-era weapons systems we don't use," President Barack Obama told Congress on Tuesday night.

Morrell declined to say Wednesday what programs he might have been talking about.

One reporter asked how the use of the nondisclosure agreement squares with the Obama administration's pledge to be more transparent.

"I don't think the administration has been advocating transparency in national security matters," Morrell said.

City officials ask Misawa for help with water supply

By T.D. FLACK
Stars and Stripes

MISAWA AIR BASE, Japan — Misawa city officials want the U.S. military's help in case they suffer a water supply failure like the one that left nearly 240,000 off-base residents in nearby towns dry in January.

Mayor Kazumasa Taneichi made the request to 35th Fighter Wing commander Col. David Stilwell during an annual community relations advisory council meeting Wednesday at the Misawa International Center.

Stilwell told Taneichi and other city representatives he wanted to arrange additional meetings to have the "experts" see what assistance the base could provide from its own internal water system.

One challenge, Stilwell predicted, would be figuring out how to link the base and city systems. He also warned that while the base had some "excess capacity," it couldn't completely support local communities in the event of a full water loss. He also added that January's situation affected Japanese base employees and Americans who were living in shortage areas.

Officials with the Hachinohe Regional Water Supply Corp. said Wednesday that the Jan. 1-6 water outage was caused by a crack in a nearly 4-foot diameter pipe that pulls water from the Mabechi River to a water purification plant. It affected more than 92,000 households in six towns and one city, but not Misawa city.

Community concerns

Among other issues Misawa city officials raised with 35th Fighter Wing commander Col. David Stilwell:

Promoting more use of the city airport

City officials asked Stilwell to promote airport use with the on-base community, and said they were working on developing better package tours and a free parking lot. Stilwell said recent changes in the "economic climate" could have resulted in more base residents staying home instead of traveling and limited funding meant fewer official flights in 2008. But, he said, the addition of direct flights to Tokyo's Narita International Airport could result in more travelers.

Illegally dumping trash off base

City officials recorded five incidents of U.S. personnel living off base who illegally dumped their garbage last year. Stilwell highlighted on-base efforts to educate those who live off base on proper procedures for throwing away their garbage. He also asked the city to have Japanese landlords address the issue immediately so proper steps could be taken to solve the problem.

Fine-tuning a gate security project

A force-protection update at the main gate has left some business owners upset that customers cannot access their stores, according to city officials. They've suggested opening three 3-foot-wide spaces in the guardrails for customers to walk through and one 12-foot-wide gate so vehicles can deliver goods. Stilwell said the base will continue to work with the owners about access.

Developing old railroad bed into a trail

City officials want the base, or the Japanese government, to turn a 1.2-mile stretch of railroad tracks that once was used to supply the base into a walking trail. Stilwell suggested continued meetings to seek a resolution.

— T.D. Flack

Stilwell told Stars and Stripes on Wednesday afternoon that the yearly meeting offers a formal way for leaders to discuss concerns. And the presence of the press, he pointed out, allows the public to see that their elected politicians are bringing community concerns to the base.

Stilwell brought his own area of concern to the meeting, asking the city for a continued push to keep off-base streets clear of snow and ice, especially given this year's heavy snowfall. City officials promised to continue to keep a close eye on the streets and to use a "snow-removing agent," such as sand or salt.

Stilwell also stressed to the Japanese leaders his command's efforts to keep off-base "incidents and accidents" in check, including working with local bar owners to ensure responsible behavior on everyone's behalf.

GI shot by men in Iraqi police uniforms dies

Stars and Stripes

One of the four U.S. soldiers shot by a pair of men in Iraqi police uniforms in Mosul has died of his wounds, the U.S. military said late Tuesday.

The soldier, who is not being identified publicly until next of kin have been notified, died at the Combat Support Hospital on the U.S. base in Mosul, officials said.

An Iraqi interpreter was also killed in the shooting, which was the third incident since November in which gunmen wearing Iraqi uniforms have attacked American troops in northern Iraq, where the insurgency has remained stronger than in other areas of the country.

Military officials did not release the conditions of the three other U.S. troops and a second Iraqi interpreter who were wounded in the incident.

According to Iraqi and American reports, the American troops had gone to meet local forces at an Iraqi police station around 2 p.m. on Tuesday. When the Americans arrived at a bridge checkpoint in the city, Iraqis manning the checkpoint opened fire.

There were conflicting reports on whether the gunmen were apprehended. Iraqi officials said the men jumped into a waiting vehicle, then sped from the scene. The officials also said the men's families had fled their homes earlier in the day, indicating the attack had been planned.

The shooting was the latest in a string of similar incidents involving Iraqi security forces in the Mosul area.

On Nov. 25, a Marine and an U.S. soldier were killed when a man in an Iraqi army uniform opened fire while they were giving out blankets near Baaj, southwest of Mosul near the Syrian border. Two Marines and three Iraqi civilians were wounded in what military officials said seemed to be an unprovoked attack.

Earlier that month, an Iraqi soldier ambushed U.S. soldiers in a courtyard of a military base in a Mosul neighborhood, killing two Americans and wounding six before he died in an ensuing gunbattle.

In December 2007, an Iraqi soldier opened fire on U.S. troops during a joint patrol in Mosul, killing two Americans and wounding three others along with a civilian interpreter. The Iraqi soldier was apprehended.

U.S. forces are in the midst of a monthlong house-to-house drive to clear insurgents from Mosul, which remains one of Iraq's most violent areas.

Afghan troops kill 18 militants

The Associated Press

KANDAHAR, Afghanistan — Afghan soldiers killed 18 militants targeting a poppy eradication force in the country's volatile south, officials said Wednesday. Two soldiers were also killed in the battle.

The clash in the Nawa district of Helmand province broke out after insurgents fired on police officers working to rid the countryside of poppy plants, from which opium is made, said Daud Ahmadi, spokesman for the governor.

Afghan and international soldiers were protecting the eradication force when it was attacked Tuesday, and two foreign soldiers were wounded in the exchange, said Ahmadi.

He did not provide the soldiers' nationalities.

Reports: Uzbekistan, NATO reach Afghan deal

MOSCOW — Uzbekistan has reached an agreement with NATO allowing the alliance to send non-military supplies through the Central Asian nation en route to Afghanistan, news agencies quoted the Uzbek president as saying Wednesday.

A U.S. military official last week said a tentative agreement had been reached, but there had been no confirmation until the statement by President Islam Karimov, which was reported by the Interfax and ITAR-Tass news agencies.

Most supplies for the international military operation in Afghanistan have gone by land through Pakistan, a route whose security is increasingly undermined by attacks.

This new northern transit route goes from Western Europe through Russia and Kazakhstan before reaching Uzbekistan. A rail spur from Uzbekistan extends a short distance into Afghanistan.

Iraq lawmaker on the run after immunity is lifted

By QASSIM ABDUL-ZAHRA

The Associated Press

BAGHDAD — Iraqi authorities ordered the midflight return of a plane carrying a Sunni lawmaker accused of directing a private terror cell, forcing him back to Baghdad on Wednesday hours before parliament lifted his immunity and cleared the way for his arrest.

Mohammed al-Dayni faces allegations he masterminded a string of attacks that include a 2007 suicide bombing inside the parliament building and mortar strikes on Baghdad's Green Zone.

He left the airport before an arrest warrant was issued, and by nightfall was the target of a nationwide manhunt.

Al-Dayni has strongly denied the charges, claiming they are part of a campaign by the Shiite-led government to silence critics. He has frequently spoken out against alleged rights abuses of Sunni prisoners and suspected Iranian influence over the nation's Shiite leaders.

The showdown over al-Dayni risks reopening Sunni-Shiite rifts after U.S.-backed efforts for political reconciliation. His supporters have called for a full-scale investigation of all parliament members suspected of links to sectarian violence.

Wisem al-Zeidi, a top parliament aide, said majority of lawmakers at an emergency session voted to lift al-Dayni's immunity from prosecution. He did not immediately give further details of the vote breakdown.

Al-Dayni claims he was traveling to Jordan to see family when authorities ordered the Iraqi Airways jet to return to Baghdad just as it was about to leave Iraqi airspace.

"I was banned from traveling. ... I am nervous, but I'm not afraid," he told The Associated Press by telephone after his plane landed back in Baghdad.

A number of Iraqi political figures facing charges of corruption or violence have fled to neighboring Jordan or Syria.

Videotaped interrogations of two former bodyguards — one of whom is al-Dayni's nephew — were released last week, implicating him as the ringleader of a network that waged a nearly three-year reign of violence.

Iraq's government, meanwhile, welcomed reports of a U.S. combat troop withdrawal by August 2010.

"The Iraqi troops are ready to take responsibility. There is nothing to worry about and the withdrawal will be carried out in coordination between the two sides," said Sadiq al-Rikabi, one of the Iraqi prime minister's top advisers.

President Barack Obama was expected to order all U.S. combat troops to leave Iraq by August of next year. Obama's announcement will speed up the timeline of a U.S.-Iraqi security pact, which took effect Jan. 1, calling for American troops to withdraw from Iraq's cities by June 30 and completely pull out troops by the end of 2011.

But the withdrawal of troops under Obama's plan would still have U.S. troops in Iraq well after parliamentary elections this year, which military officials have said is one of the next big security tests. There are more than 140,000 U.S. troops in Iraq.

In Ankara, Turkey's foreign minister, Ali Babacan, said his country was willing to offer "support and help" for the U.S. pullout from neighboring Iraq.

Obama tells nation: 'We will recover'

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — To a nation reeling from recession and facing long-festering problems, President Barack Obama has a simple reminder: "We are not quitters."

Whatever the problems, the new president promised Tuesday in the first prime-time speech of his term, "We will rebuild, we will recover and the United States of America will emerge stronger than before."

On Wednesday, a senior administration official said Obama's first budget will seek $634 billion over 10 years as a down payment on health care reform.

The official said Obama's proposal is meant to start a dialogue with Congress over how to provide coverage for an estimated 48 million uninsured while also slowing health care costs, which amount to $2.4 trillion a year and keep rising even as the economy is shrinking.

The senior official spoke on condition of anonymity.

Standing before a joint session of Congress on Tuesday night, Obama optimistically sketched an agenda that began with jobs, then broadened quickly to include a stable credit system, better schools, health care reform, reliable domestic sources of energy and an end to the war in Iraq. Specifics will follow, he said, although he conceded billions more may be necessary to stabilize the banking system.

The president drew loud cheers as he made his way down the center aisle, again when he stood alone, at the podium to speak, and several more times in an address delivered in a hall packed with lawmakers, members of his administration, Supreme Court justices and diplomats.

Humorous and poignant moments took their turns on a night when virtually the entire government gathered under one roof.

As when Obama explained his decision to have Vice President Joe Biden oversee implementation of his stimulus plan by saying, "Nobody messes with Joe."

Or when he urged lawmakers to pass education legislation named in part for Massachusetts' Democratic Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, battling brain cancer. The 77-year-old lawmaker "has never stopped asking what he can do for his country," Obama said.

Little more than one month into the president's term, Obama's speech followed congressional passage of an $787 billion stimulus bill, coincided with pending proposals to stem an epidemic of mortgage foreclosures and served as the prelude to a budget Obama pledged will cut projected deficits in half by the end of his term.

The new president submits his tax and spending plans to Congress on Thursday.

Aside from health care, the budget will extend Obama's signature $400 tax cut for workers, originally enacted as part of the economic stimulus plan.

The budget also calls for an increase in the top income tax rate, from 35 percent to 39.6 percent for couples with incomes above $250,000 a year, said another administration official.

Obama has called on Congress to send him a health care reform bill this year, but even before the budget arrives on Capitol Hill, senior members of both parties say they are concerned about the cost.

Republicans said they were ready to work with Obama and his Democratic allies in Congress — up to a point.

"Where we agree, Republicans must be the president's strongest partners. And where we disagree, Republicans have a responsibility to be candid and offer better ideas for a path forward," said Louisiana Gov. Bobby Jindal, tapped to deliver the GOP response to Obama's speech on Tuesday.

Obama taps Locke for Commerce

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Barack Obama on Wednesday announced he has chosen former Washington Gov. Gary Locke as his nominee for Commerce secretary, trying a third time to fill a key Cabinet post for a country in recession.

"I'm sure it's not lost on anyone that we've tried this a couple of times. But I'm a big believer in keeping at something until you get it right. And Gary is the right man for this job," Obama said.

Obama praised Locke, a Chinese-American, as a man who shares his vision for turning around the moribund economy, and is committed to doing what it takes to keep the American dream alive.

Locke said he was committed to making the sprawling agency an "active and integral partner" in advancing Obama's economic agenda.

"The Department of Commerce can and will help create the jobs and the economic vitality our nation needs," Locke said.

7 hurt by gunfire at Mardi Gras

By MICHAEL KUNZELMAN
The Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS — The shooting of seven people, including a toddler, marred Fat Tuesday partying as ear-piercing gunfire sent revelers ducking for cover and brought Mardi Gras' final stream of truck floats to a horrifying halt.

The 20-month-old child was grazed by a bullet and wasn't seriously injured. Two suspects were in custody, police said.

Gunshots erupted near the Garden District about 1:40 p.m. as a stream of truck floats passed by after the last major parade, Rex, had ended. Thousands of people partied in the streets on the last day of Carnival before the violence broke out along the oak-lined Uptown streetcar line.

"It sounded like a string of fireworks, so I knew it was more than one shooter," said Toni Labat, 29, a limousine company manager. She was with her two children, a 2-year-old boy and a 10-year-old girl.

"Everybody was petrified. They hit the ground, the floats stopped, everybody on the floats ducked," Labat said. One man dragged himself on the ground screaming for help after being wounded and another man was gasping for air and bleeding from his mouth.

Police spokesman Bob Young said the victims — three men ages 50, 33 and 20, two young women ages 20 and 17, and a 15-year-old boy — were taken to area hospitals. Young said the 20-month-old baby was grazed by a bullet and not seriously hurt.

The two most seriously injured victims underwent surgery for stomach wounds, said Officer Janssen Valencia, though he didn't know the men's conditions.

Dr. Jim Parry, 41, a surgeon at a gathering of doctors near the shooting site, ran over to tend to one man who he said had been shot in the abdomen. "He kept asking me, 'Was I shot? Was I shot?'"

"I'm off to Afghanistan this summer. Damn, this is more dangerous than Afghanistan," said Parry, an Air Force reservist.

Two men, 19-year-old Mark Brooks and 18-year-old Louis Lazone, both of New Orleans, were each booked on seven counts of attempted first-degree murder.

Brooks also faces a charge of possession of a firearm by a convicted felon.

Supreme Court: No guns for domestic abusers

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court on Tuesday affirmed the use of a federal law barring people convicted of domestic violence crimes from owning guns, the first firearms case at the high court since last year's decision in support of gun rights.

The court, in a 7-2 decision, said state laws against battery need not specifically mention domestic violence to fall under the domestic violence gun ban that was enacted in 1996.

It is enough, Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg wrote, that the victim of such a crime be involved in a domestic relationship with the attacker. Chief Justice John Roberts and Justice Antonin Scalia dissented.

IN THE WORLD

PETER DEJONG / AP

Rescue workers are seen Wednesday near the wreckage of a Turkish Airlines Boeing 737-800 at Amsterdam's Schiphol Airport. The aircraft, with 135 people aboard, slammed into a muddy field while attempting to land. Nine people were killed and more than 50 were injured, many seriously, officials said. The aircraft broke into three pieces on impact about two miles short of the runway.

Turkish airliner crashes in Amsterdam, killing 9

By TOBY STERLING
The Associated Press

AMSTERDAM — A Turkish Airlines jetliner plummeted out of cloudy skies and plowed into a muddy field on approach to Amsterdam on Wednesday, but remarkably some 125 people — the vast majority of those aboard — survived. The nine dead included both pilots.

The Boeing 737-800 en route from Istanbul to Amsterdam broke into three pieces when it hit the ground about two miles short of the runway at Schiphol Airport at 10:31 a.m. The fuselage split in two, close to the cockpit, and the tail broke off.

But the wreckage didn't burn and scores of people walked away from it.

Survivor Huseyin Sumer told Turkish NTV television he crawled to safety out of a crack in the fuselage.

"We were about to land, we could not understand what was happening, some passengers screamed in panic but it happened so fast," Sumer said.

He said the crash was over in five to 10 seconds.

Pieter van Vollenhoven, head of the Dutch Safety Authority investigating the cause, said it appeared the plane lost speed before crashing.

"You see that because of a lack of speed it literally fell out of the sky," he told NOS radio after visiting the crash site.

The plane's flight data recorders have been found and will be analyzed by experts.

Turkish Transport Minister Binali Yildirim said it was "a miracle" there were not more casualties.

"The fact that the plane landed on a soft surface and that there was no fire helped keep the number of fatalities low," he said.

Experts said that might also have helped avert a fire resulting from ruptured fuel tanks and lines on the underside of the fuselage, which appeared to have suffered very heavy impact damage.

Having almost reached its destination, the plane would have used up a major portion of its fuel.

Experts say crashes involving modern airliners are more survivable due to engineering advances that have resulted in strengthened structures and fire retardant technologies used for cabin seats and furnishings, as well as better emergency training of both cockpit and cabin crews.

A spokesman for investigators said two pilots and an apprentice pilot were among the dead.

Six of the injured were in critical condition, 25 were seriously hurt and 24 had slight injuries, health authorities said. Survivors were taken to 11 hospitals including an emergency field hospital set up by the military in the central city of Utrecht.

The Turkish ambassador to the Netherlands, Selahattin Alpar, told Turkish news agency Anadolu there were 72 Turks and 32 Dutch people on board. There was no information on the nationality of other passengers.

Investigators will explore a wide range of possible causes of the crash, ranging from weather-related factors such as wind shear or icing, to fuel starvation, navigational errors, pilot fatigue or bird strikes.

Experts say initial results could be made public soon because of the sophistication of the Boeing 737-800s black boxes, although the full report will likely not be ready before the end of the year.

Weather at the airport near the time of the crash was cloudy with slight drizzle.

But Candan Karlitekin, the head of the airline's board of directors, told reporters that visibility was good at the time of landing.

"Visibility was clear and around 5,000 yards. Some 550 yards before landing; the plane landed on a field instead of the runway," he said.

Turkish Airlines chief Temel Kotil said the captain, Hasan Tahsin, was very experienced and a former air force pilot.

Turkish officials said the plane was built in 2002 and last underwent thorough maintenance on Dec. 22.

Mumbai gunman formally charged

By AIJAZ ANSARI
The Associated Press

MUMBAI, India — Investigators charged the lone surviving gunman from the Mumbai attacks with 12 crimes on Wednesday, including murder and waging war against India.

Pakistani Mohammed Ajmal Kasab has been held by the police since he was captured in the early hours of the attacks, but had not been formally charged. Nine other attackers were killed during the three-day siege, which left 164 people dead and targeted luxury hotels, a Jewish center and other sites across the city.

Special public prosecutor Ujjwal Nikam said he expected the trial to begin in the coming weeks and conclude in three to six months.

The charges — which are detailed in a document more than 10,000 pages long — also included Kasab's confession, accounts from 150 witnesses and closed circuit television footage that shows him and his accomplice walking into Mumbai's crowded Chhatrapati Shivaji train station and spraying it with bullets, Mumbai police's main investigator Rakesh Maria had said earlier.

Indian law requires that charges be filed against a suspect within 90 days of arrest. Kasab was formally arrested Nov. 28.

Kasab has been given a copy of the police charge sheet, Nikam said Wednesday. He also said that at least 35 other suspects in the attacks had "absconded" and authorities would continue investigating. He declined to list their names or nationalities.

If convicted on the two most critical charges — murder and waging war against India — 21-year-old Kasab will likely face the death penalty.

India has blamed the attack on Lashkar-e-Taiba, an Islamist militant group widely believed created by Pakistani intelligence agencies in the 1980s to fight India rule in the divided Kashmir region.

India has also said that all 10 attackers were from Pakistan.

Earlier this month, Pakistani officials acknowledged that the Mumbai attacks were partly plotted on its soil and announced criminal proceedings against eight suspects.

Sierra Leone rebel leaders found guilty

By CLARENCE ROY-MACAULAY
The Associated Press

FREETOWN, Sierra Leone — A U.N.-sponsored war crimes court on Wednesday found three top rebel leaders guilty of multiple crimes against humanity, bringing an end to the tribunal that was set up in the wake of Sierra Leone's disastrous civil war.

The rebels known for maiming their victims with machetes have left the West African nation with a population of amputees, as well as countless thousands of orphans and widows.

Issay Sesay, an interim leader of the Revolutionary United Front, and one of his battlefield commanders, Morris Kallon, were convicted on 16 of 18 counts.

Another battlefield commander, Augustine Gbao, was found guilty on 14 of the 18 he had faced.

The charges against all three include amputation, murder, enlistment of child soldiers and sexual slavery.

They also include forced marriage, a charge that depicts the enslavement that countless young girls suffered when their villages were raided and they were forced to "marry" a rebel.

Wednesday's convictions marked the first time that the charge has been successfully handed down in an international court of law.

Sesay, Kallon and Gbao all had pleaded not guilty to the charges. They shook their heads as the verdict was read.

"While the decision issued today cannot mend the broken lives and severed limbs, it goes a long way to validate the terrible suffering endured by countless Sierra Leoneans — and it puts current-day perpetrators on notice," said Corinne Dufka, an expert on Sierra Leone for Human Rights Watch.

Doolittle gets it done

'American Idol' standout returns to spotlight

When accomplished backup singer Melinda Doolittle auditioned for the sixth season of "American Idol," she told the judges she was there to "get over the fear of standing in front of people."

On "Idol," Doolittle did more than learn to take the lead. She became a fan favorite and ended up in third place. Many said she should've won, including Simon Cowell.

Two years later, Doolittle is no longer anyone's backup. Her first album "Coming Back to You" is in stores now.

In recent interview, the 31-year-old talked about her music, her "American Idol" background, and the "guilty pleasure" songs on her iPod.

Your fans are saying, "Finally! Your album is out!"

I am so happy to be releasing this record at this point in time. I took my time with it and just really found the style of music ... a retro soul sound ... that really resonated with me.

In showbiz, they like to strike while the iron's hot. Were you worried about the break in between "Idol"?

I wasn't impatient, I wasn't even worried. I was just concerned with making sure when I did put something out it represented me well. I think that's probably one of the best things about "Idol." It awards you so many opportunities. You can release a record immediately or you can take your time with it.

You were a backup singer. Is it strange to be out in front now?

Sometimes it is a weird feeling, however, it's amazing. I didn't know how I was going to really deal with it because background singing was my comfort zone and I loved every second of it.

When I got on that stage and started doing lead songs, something came over me I was like,

AP

"I love to tell a story with this song, I love that part of it ... I'm gonna have my own background singers and my own coming together moment for me." Just a full circle moment.

Everybody has an image. What's yours?

Oh gosh. I'm just me! I don't know how to be anything different except for somebody who loves to tell a story on stage, so I hope that comes across. That's probably a really cool part of coming off of "American Idol" where it was reality and you've got us and that's what I have to give right now.

You've mentioned "Idol" a few times. Not every former contestant likes to talk about it.

They want to separate themselves from the show.

I don't know how you could get to this point and not talk about "American Idol." For me, it was my boot camp. It really prepared me for this moment.

Who's on your iPod right now?

Adele, (Beyonce's) "Sasha Fierce," CeCe Winans, Jason Mraz. I do have Miley Cyrus' "Fly on the Wall" and Jonas Brothers "Lovebug." Those two are like my guilty pleasures!

Who would you love to record a song with?

Steven Tyler. It's definitely a dream of mine to sing with Steven Tyler.

Miley: Nothing 'weird' with dad

Miley Cyrus doesn't like to admit it, but she's bothered by people who think there's something wrong with the bond between her and her dad, singer Billy Ray Cyrus.

"The media has said some stuff about my dad and me being too close and too cuddly for a father and a daughter," the 16-year-old actress-singer writes in "Miles to Go," a new memoir. "For me and my dad, it's not weird at all."

Cyrus' memoir, written with Hilary Liftin, will be published next month by Disney-Hyperion Books.

Cyrus notes that she loves her father (who co-stars on her "Hannah Montana" show), isn't afraid to show it, and "we don't let other people tell us what expressions we're supposed to have on our faces when we take a picture together!"

Oscar feng shui

Kate Winslet and Sean Penn should think long and hard about where to display their coveted Oscars.

Amanda Collins practices feng shui — the ancient Chinese art of arranging objects to bring balance and harmony — and says Winslet should place her award in the southwest area of her home, since that's the direction that'll bring her luck and career advancement.

Collins suggests "The Reader" actress place her Oscar in a room where she spends a lot of time, like her living room, so it can constantly inspire her to conquer bigger and better roles.

As for Sean Penn, Collins thinks the two-time Oscar winner should display his latest Academy Award in the northwest area of his home — the direction that'll help him "maintain fame and wealth."

Both winners should incorporate the element of running water near their Oscar, since water attracts abundance.

Collins says putting a fountain east of their award, flowing towards the center of the room, will "enhance their connections" — crucial for the world of showbiz.

Celeb chef Batali serves up a little profanity

The king and queen of Spain got a dash of profanity from celebrity chef Mario Batali at a $1,000-a-plate dinner during the South Beach Wine & Food Festival in Coral Gables, Fla.

At a dinner honoring Spain's growing international culinary presence, Batali dropped some royally naughty words as he hosted the event in the presence of King Juan Carlos and Queen Sofia.

Growing impatient when the crowd did not quiet down quickly enough after he stepped to the microphone, he used the f-word, and asked the audience if he could have "10 seconds of your time."

Batali dropped the f-word again while introducing chef Jose Andres, whose Los Angeles restaurant, The Bazaar, has been heralded by critics. He finished by grabbing Andres' bottom.

Those seated near the royal couple said the queen blanched. Gloria Estefan chortled. And Andres kept his cool.

"This is what food and wine from Spain will do to you," he said.

Musicians want radio stations to pay them fees

Sheryl Crow, will.i.am, Herbie Hancock and other U.S. entertainers are asking Congress to force radio stations to pay them when their music is broadcast.

The musicians appeared Tuesday in Congress on behalf of the musicFirst Coalition to push legislation that would require radio stations to pay them royalties for when their songs are played.

Satellite radio, Internet radio and cable TV music channels already pay fees to performers and musicians, along with songwriter royalties. But commercial AM and FM radio stations do not.

The National Association of Broadcasters opposes the fee. It says it puts thousands of radio jobs at risk. The association also says radio stations drive listeners to buy music.

Spider web in fuel line isn't that unusual

Dear Tom and Ray:

I was driving my 2007 Forester to work the other day when the check engine light came on (it has about 15,000 miles on it). I brought it in to the dealer, and they checked it out. The computer said it was code P1443, Evaporation Control Solenoid Malfunction. They cleaned a spider web out of the charcoal canister hose. Does this sound right, or am I getting hosed? (It was covered by the warranty — but I am suspicious that something else might actually be wrong with the vehicle and will reappear after the warranty runs out). What do you think? — Mary

TOM: Believe it or not, Mary, this is said to be a pretty common problem. We've never seen it in our shop, but we've read about it. I guess gasoline is the Chanel No. 5 of the arachnid world.

RAY: We've seen a number of service bulletins over the years alerting us to the dreaded spider-web-in-the-fuel-line problem.

In your case, there probably was a bunch of webby stuff in the fresh-air intake line to the evaporative emissions canister.

That was preventing the fuel tank from breathing properly (fresh air has to enter the gas tank to fill up the space left by the used gasoline; otherwise, the tank will slowly implode). That set off your check engine light.

TOM: So I don't think the dealer is hiding anything, or trying to cover up some other problem. I'd guess that he told you exactly what was wrong, and he fixed it.

RAY: Of course, in order to prevent this from happening again, he'll want to sell you the specially made Subaru Bird of Prey to eat any future little "line blockers."

Now that Buick is officially part of the General Motors survival plan, the upscale brand must enhance its relevance to younger buyers.

A big part of that effort is the 2010 LaCrosse, an elegant but sporty sedan that bears little resemblance to the first generation model.

The 2010 LaCrosse turns heads with a swept design somewhat reminiscent of the 1950s models in that the front end is sharp and the back end is blunt and hefty, suggesting a projectile that might be fired from a slingshot.

The bulk of the back end is accentuated by a high waistline and reduced ratio of glass to sheetmetal, a trick Chrysler put to good use in its 300 sedan.

Buick tested reactions to the LaCrosse design via the Buick Invicta show car at the 2008 Beijing Auto Show. Buick, and GM in general, are enjoying some of their strongest markets in China.

Although pricing has not been announced, it would be very surprising to see Buick transcend current pricing by much, given the weakness of the market. The 2009 LaCrosse retails in the $26,000 to $33,000 range.

The 2010 model will sell in front-drive or all-wheel-drive with three trim levels: CX, CXL and CXS. Shipments to showrooms

2010 Buick LaCrosse

TYPE: Front-drive, five-passenger, mid-size sedanKEY RIVALS: Toyota Avalon, Acura TL, Chrysler 300, Lexus ES 350POWER: 3.6-liter, 280-horsepower V6; six-speed auto transmissionFUEL ECONOMY: 17 city, 26 highway mpg; 18.4-gallon tank should begin in early summer.

Two engines will be offered. The base 3-liter V6 with double overhead cams and 24 valves will produce 255 horses and travel 18 miles per gallon in the city and 27 on the highway.

The 3.6-liter V6 is tuned to turn out 280 horses and cover 17 mpg in the city and 26 on the highway. Both engines send torque through a six-speed Hydra-Matic transmission.

The direct injection engines create more power with less fuel and reduce vehicle emissions through greater combustion control, according to Buick engineers. Cold-start emissions fall by about 25 percent.

Buick is targeting buyers in the 35-55-year-old demographic with the LaCrosse. That might sound ambitious for a division that is battling a reputation for providing rides to the old folks' home.

Now is actually a great time to buy a new car

By LARRY PRINTZ
The Virginian-Pilot

NORFOLK, Va. — It's been a cold winter, and I'm not talking about the weather. When it comes to economic activity, the year of the ox so far has proven to be as lively as the beast it's named for. The current climate of fear has many folks paring back their spending.

But that has led retailers, car dealers included, to ratchet up the incentives to buy. So, assuming you're in a solid financial position, is it a good time to buy a new car or truck? Yes. And here's why.

■ Inventories are high: The worst of the economic slowdown hit at a time of year when sales tend to be slow anyway. Couple that with inventories ordered during sunnier economic times and you'll find a good selection of vehicles to choose from. Just don't expect it to last. The economic slowdown has automakers slashing their production capacity. That means that come spring, when sales pick up, there will be fewer cars to choose from.

■ So are incentives: Remember how six months ago people were on waiting lists to buy a Toyota Prius hybrid? Right now, there's a $750 cash rebate to stir interest in the vehicle. Want something cheaper? The Nissan Versa 1.8 hatchback offers a $1,000 back — not bad for an economy car that starts at $13,100. Want a truck? The Ford F-150, which starts at just more than $21,000, has a $3,000 customer rebate. Or take $1,000 cash back and finance it for three years at zero percent. There's also a $500 military incentive. And that's before discounts or trade-ins.

■ Sports cars are a good bet: Look, convertibles don't sell in January. Ditto sports cars. Buying one now is perfect timing. If you wait until spring, you won't get the deal you'll get right now.

One last thought: Beyond getting a new ride, buying a new car or truck does something more: it supports the economy, both locally and nationally. It's almost patriotic. Give it a try this weekend. Kick some tires. Run the figures. You'll be surprised.

IRS 'Free File' program can cut costs for many

By SUSAN TOMPOR
Detroit Free Press

Now that cheap is the new chic, why not cut back on how much you pay to do your federal income taxes, too?

Some taxpayers might be able to save from $40 on tax software to $200 for a tax preparer if they look into the "Free File" program through the Internal Revenue Service Web site at www.irs.gov.

The catch: You must have an adjusted gross income of $56,000 or less in 2008 to tap into "Free File." The IRS says that income limit covers about 99 million taxpayers or 70 percent of all taxpayers, but only a tiny fraction use "Free File."

"I don't know what's not to like about it — if you qualify," said Tom Ochenschlager, vice president for taxation for the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants in Washington.

He has used Free File to help his children, who are in their 20s, file their tax returns.

"It's a lot easier than sitting down with paper copies."

Another point: Be aware of fees to prepare and e-file state returns, even if you go through the IRS site.

If you use Free File and choose the H&R Block option, for example, it would cost $29.95 to prepare a state income tax return. It would cost another $29.95 to e-file that state return.

TurboTax Freedom Edition at www.irs.gov offers free tax preparation and free e-file for state returns for 21 states. However, TurboTax Freedom applies to "Free File" only if your Adjusted Gross Income is $30,000 or less or if you are active military or you qualify for Earned Income Tax Credit.

You are under no obligation to file your state return with a preparer participating in Free File. The IRS has prohibited participants from offering refund anticipation loans via "Free File."

You will need to be careful. Make sure that you plug in the correct numbers and double-check what you have on the screen with what you have on your forms.

More money: To get a refund faster, you'd want to get that return via direct deposit. You'd need your account number as well as a routing number. The refund may be available in less than 10 days with electronic filing and direct deposit.

What do you do if you're above the $56,000 limit?

This year, you can use what's called a "Free File Fillable Forms" service. It works well if you know how to fill out your return by yourself and want to plug in the correct numbers to file the federal return electronically for free. You'd go to www.irs.gov and go to "Free File" and then click on "Choose Tax Forms."

Staying the course not best bet for everyone

By KARA MCGUIRE
Star Tribune (Minneapolis)

MINNEAPOLIS — How low can it go?

That question continues to haunt investors as the stock markets hit lows not seen in years. For some investors — professional and amateur alike — the steep declines spell opportunity. Others are content to sit on the sidelines until they see signs of recovery.

Steve Latham of Minnetonka, Minn., is in the first camp. "For people who are not affected by the downturn, this is a great time to buy stocks cheap," Latham, a financial services firm employee, hasn't changed his lifestyle or his investments.

But Mary Rollins of Plymouth, Minn., lost her job at lender GMAC more than two years ago. "I'm trying to be optimistic," said Rollins, who now works as a software developer. "But we've changed our 401(k) to more conservative investments."

Being optimistic can be tough in what Greg Zandlo, a Coon Rapids, Minn.-based certified financial planner calls a "mini Depression" — both economically and psychologically. Zandlo predicts the days of 8 to 12 percent annual stock market returns will be replaced by lower, single-digit returns that will last at least five years, maybe more.

So he's telling clients to stay out of the market and put money in cash, stable value funds, or short-term bond funds. "You just squirrel away your nuts; opportunities will be there down the road," he said.

James Paulsen, chief investment strategist for Wells Capital Management, is sticking with his belief that there are some "wonderful" opportunities in the stock market. He can pick positive signs out of the vortex of negative news. For example, he's encouraged that stocks aren't trading at abnormal volume levels, which suggests that "a lot of sellers have already sold even though we're retesting the bottom and scarring the hell out of ourselves about banks."

Researchers at the Leuthold Group in Minneapolis rely on hundreds of technical indicators to determine the stock market's direction. The group's Major Trend Index has been bullish for months. Doug Ramsey, Leuthold's research director, said research shows stocks are attractively priced for the first time in 25 years. He is confident that investors buying stocks today will be rewarded with annualized returns of 10 to 15 percent over the next decade or so.

If the Standard and Poor's 500 Index falls below its November 2008 closing low of 752, Leuthold mutual fund managers will override the positive-leaning major trend index, lowering the firm's exposure to stocks from 60 percent to 50 percent.

Ramsey suggests investors hedge similarly by figuring out the lowest percentage of their portfolio they'd have invested in stocks, and the highest amount, and then allocating no more than three-quarters of the highest amount to stocks. As for which stocks look good, Ramsey thinks foreign stocks are more attractively priced. Of the 45 countries he studies, the United States is the fifth most expensive market. Small caps and growth stocks are also attractive, as are stocks of biotechnology companies. "But the key point is all of them are cheap," he said.

Cheap or not, Bob Markman of Markman Capital Management in Edina, Minn., thinks individual investors should be out of the market.

"The financial industrial complex has hoodwinked investors so much to think that they have got to 'stay the course,' they've got to 'buy and hold,' no matter what the pain is."

The place to invest today, he says, is not in his equity mutual funds, but in high-quality corporate bonds and cash. "If you're out of the market and the bull market starts, what have you lost? You get back in. But what if you stay in and you're wrong?"

AER news not a big shocker

Anybody who is shocked by the Army Emergency Relief debacle ("Charity for GIs gets low marks in giving back" article, Feb. 24) was probably also shocked by the Red Cross' similar situation and the Feed the Children one, too.

The road to hell is often paved with good intentions. I have seen my soldiers turned away by AER in the past and, because of that, quit donating to it for a while. I've also seen serious pressure put on soldiers to "donate" to this dubious organization.

The most shocking part I read though was that, due to the recession, it is going to "trim back relief." Umm, What?! Wouldn't you think that a charitable organization should step up its charity in tougher times? It really needs to try to do some spin/damage control now and salvage what's left of its (cough) good name. Wow!

Let's work together

Usually while reading "the Stripes," I get to the letters section and just agree or disagree with the letters. However, I read "Overcoming labels, stereotypes" (letter, Feb. 24) and could not have agreed more. I agree with every word.

I am of Hispanic/Anglo descent, but am not a minority. I am an American and that makes me part of the majority.

I am also tired of the "race card" being played. Every time someone is arrested or beaten, it is a racial issue. Every time a crime is committed, it is a hate crime.

Do hate crimes occur? Of course they do. Is there racism? Of course there is, but remember racism and hate crimes go in all directions and come in all colors. Not every issue is racially based, unless we make it that way.

I had the blessing to grow up in a military family and made friends of every color and creed through that time. The military is a

We as soldiers are expected to set a standard. Let's get to work. Instead of blaming race as a reason for everything that goes wrong or has gone wrong, let us shoulder the blame for our troubles, i.e., did I get arrested because I am Hispanic, or was it because I was drunk in public and hit a cop? Did I not get promoted because of my race, or is it really because I am a substandard soldier?

Let us work harder to forge a better America. I want to leave this country a better America for my kids. Let's get to work.

Representing the population

The writer of "Lack of black leaders" (letter, Feb. 11) states: "As the demographics of America change, so will the military, and finally more blacks will be given the opportunity to achieve those leadership ranks instead of being judged by their race." However, the demographics of our military and America itself do not back up his claim.

U.S. Census Bureau estimates show whites made up 74 percent of the population and blacks made up 12 percent in 2008. A 2008 Heritage Foundation study on the demographics of the U.S. military states that 65 percent of enlisted recruits were white and 12 percent were black; 65 percent of ROTC grads were white and 12 percent black; and 81 percent of the academies' grads were white and 6 percent black. The total force in 2008 was 75 percent white and 18 percent black.

We can conclude from this data that the armed forces are a very accurate representation of our population and the number of blacks/whites in leadership positions is proportionate to the demographics of the military. The disproportion in the number of academy grads is a clear indicator of why there are significantly fewer blacks in general officer positions.

The letter states: "Since 2003, the military recruiting of black enlisted and officers has continued to drastically decline." However, the percentage of black recruits has declined only slightly over this time frame. All the same, we are an all-volunteer force, so how this is relevant or any fault of the government or armed forces is beyond me.

Historically, our armed forces have been ahead of the civilian sector concerning race relations. Any member of our armed forces who works hard and studies has the opportunity to attain rank and leadership roles. I would like to believe that our leaders are placed into their leadership positions based solely on their qualifications, regardless of race.

Pluses, minuses of Obama's mortgage plan

Chicago Tribune editorial

It's easy to find fault with President Barack Obama's mortgage relief plan, and many critics have. ... The package won't satisfy everyone. Obama doesn't pretend it's a grand solution — saying that it will merely "prevent the worst consequences of this crisis from wreaking even greater havoc on the economy."

But that doesn't mean it's not worth doing. Overall, it's a sensible attempt to contain a crisis whose effects are still spreading.

The current economic downturn stems mostly from the burst housing bubble. Falling home prices have caused a surge of foreclosures. Banks holding mortgage-backed paper have seen their balance sheets erode. Lenders have cut back on lending.

All these events have stalled the economy, feeding the original cycle. So extending help to struggling homeowners makes sense for everyone, not just the direct beneficiaries — just as treating tuberculosis is in the interest of those who have not been infected as well as those who have.

Obama's blueprint has two major virtues. First, it recognizes that the government can't rescue everyone. Second, it relies heavily on voluntary incentives to spur lenders to renegotiate with borrowers instead of resorting to foreclosure. It carries a price tag of $275 billion. ...

Obama's plan would let many mortgage holders who are current on their payments and owe less than 105 percent of the value of their property refinance at a lower interest rate, through the federally backed Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac. That would ease the strain on millions of homeowners who might otherwise default.

It would also pay to get lenders to change the terms of delinquent mortgages, so that overstretched borrowers would be able to avoid foreclosure. Mortgage servicers that cut payments to 31 percent of the homeowner's income would get substantial subsidies. They would also get bonuses for reworking terms and additional fees if the borrower stays current.

Where the president goes wrong is to authorize courts to cut the mortgage balances of homeowners who file for bankruptcy. True, that would help today's borrowers. But it would also upend the established rules for home loans, thus assuring higher rates and lower availability in the future. If you want to discourage banks from mortgage lending, this is a great way to do it — and to further depress the housing sector.

OPINION

Wrong editorial cartoon, wrong reaction

By KATHLEEN PARKER

Cartoon outrage is becoming tedious, as is the need to explain once more why being offended is not just cause for battle.

This time it's not Muslims rioting in the streets, but the Rev. Al Sharpton leading protests against a New York Post cartoon that he and others consider racist.

Drawing on two events in the news cycle — a violent chimpanzee felled by police, and the stimulus bill — cartoonist Sean Delonas sketched a dead chimpanzee lying in a pool of blood in front of two cops with a smoking gun. The balloon read: "They'll have to find someone else to write the next stimulus bill."

If you don't get it, there's a good reason. It was a bad cartoon. It didn't work. The connection between the two events simply wasn't organic enough to evoke the necessary "Aha!" Moreover, the images carry too much free-associative freight.

The mind's eye sees the word "stimulus" and thinks President Barack Obama. The bill may have been written by congressional staffers, but it's Obama's stimulus package. The mind's eye sees a dead chimpanzee and ... strays off course, away from the news of the animal attacking a woman to a history of dehumanizing blacks.

It may be subliminal, but it's there. And dehumanization is never funny.

Cartoonists rely on readers' collective understanding of symbols and metaphor and on their unconscious connecting of images to ideas. Given that dependence, cartoonists have to be aware of the many ways those symbols might be linked within a given time and context.

The Delonas cartoon was offensive for reasons unrelated to race. No sane person enjoyed seeing or reading about police killing the chimpanzee. They may as well have killed Bonzo. Compounding the horror of this poor animal drawn dead and bleeding was the knowledge of its gruesome attack on a woman, who at the time was in critical condition.

Not funny.

Let's add even another layer of cultural understanding — the too-oft-read headline: "White cop shoots unarmed black." One can parse the circumstances in each case, but the statistical evidence is that these shootings happen too often.

Do I think Delonas meant to convey all these layers? Not at all, though cartoonists have unconscious motivations like everyone else. He may have considered the possible racist interpretation and justified his decision because he didn't mean it that way.

Cartoonists make artistic and editorial judgments every day, though some cartoonists have better judgment than others. Even so, outrage is out of proportion to the offense, and demands for retributive justice are more dangerous than a lousy cartoon.

Everything I know about cartooning I learned during many long conversations with the late political cartoonist Doug Marlette, a giant of the industry and one of journalism's most eloquent explainers. At times like this, I wonder what he would say, though I think I know. I took notes.

If he were alive, I doubt that Marlette would find anything defensible in the cartoon in question. Although he was an equal opportunity offender, especially when it came to religion and politics, being offensive was never his objective. The goal was to be effective; offense was the occasional byproduct.

Delonas was offensive without being effective because he had nothing to say. Cops-kill-chimp/stimulus-bill-bad is not the stuff of revelation. It is literal, blunt and unclever.

If (big if) Marlette had considered the chimpanzee as a vehicle for some larger point, he never would have made it a pivot point for anything that could be associated with the nation's first African-American president. No one was more attuned to the workings of the unconscious mind or more profoundly moved by the civil rights struggles against the terrorist sons of his native South. Two cops shooting an animal historically employed to portray blacks as less than human — in the context of a black president's seminal piece of legislation — would have been not only morally repugnant but just not funny.

Nonetheless, Marlette also would have defended the cartoonist's right to fail and to offend others in pursuit of an ideal. He would have reminded all those upset by this cartoon that the freedom to offend is the very same freedom that allows them to protest when their feelings are hurt.

Be careful, he might have said, lest we lose for winning.

Chimpanzees belong in their home, not our homes

By JANE GOODALL

Last week in Stamford, Conn., a chimpanzee named Travis was shot and killed after he mauled a friend of his owner. The chimpanzee lived with a widow, eating lobster and ice cream at the table, wearing human clothes and entertaining himself with a computer and television.

But as the tragedy made clear, a chimpanzee can never be totally domesticated.

The human brain is more highly developed than that of any other living creature. So why can't we learn that wild animals simply do not make good "pets"?

I believe it has a great deal to do with the fact that chimpanzees are so frequently used in entertainment and advertising. Only a month ago, Americans watching the Super Bowl may have laughed at an ad in which chimpanzees dressed as mechanics worked on a car. They seemed cute, funny and even lovable. Is it any wonder viewers might think that chimpanzees would make great pets?

Nothing could be further from the truth. Only infant chimpanzees are used in entertainment and advertising because, as they approach maturity, at about 6 to 8 years of age, they become strong and unmanageable. Chimpanzees evolved in the tropical forests of Africa, and that's where they're suited to live, roaming in groups of their own kind. A house in Connecticut was a completely alien environment for a chimp.

Yet as a "domesticated" chimpanzee, Travis could never have returned to the wild. He had never learned the array of skills necessary to survive there. The entertainment industry and pet owners rarely, if ever, provide for the long-term care of chimpanzees. Zoos don't want them because they have not learned to interact with others of their kind. So most of these poor creatures spend the rest of their lives — as much as 50 years or more — in small cages in circuses, roadside attractions and, yes, even in the homes of individuals who lack the means to provide for them.

Meanwhile, more infant chimpanzees are bred to maintain the supply for the entertainment industry.

The use of chimpanzees in entertainment and advertising not only condemns chimpanzees to lives they were not meant to live, it makes it hard for people to believe that these apes are actually endangered in the wild. But they are.

Chimpanzees are losing habitat, in part because of commercial logging and in part because of encroachment by ever-growing human populations who live in poverty and cut down the forest to grow crops and graze cattle. This deforestation also contributes significantly to climate change. And sometimes chimpanzees are caught up in ethnic conflicts or killed for their meat, a practice that is believed to have led to the human strains of HIV.

The Connecticut tragedy should remind us not just that chimpanzees do not make good pets but that their fate is intimately tied to ours.

Parents could face murder charge

MA BOSTON — Evidence shows parents accused of killing their 4-year-old daughter with an overdose of prescription medication should be tried for first-degree murder, not less-severe charges, the Massachusetts Appeals Court ruled.

There is enough evidence to find probable cause that Carolyn and Michael Riley "murdered Rebecca with deliberate premeditation and with extreme atrocity or cruelty," the court said.

It overturned the ruling of a lower court judge, who had reduced the charges to second-degree murder after finding there was no evidence of premeditation.

The Rileys say they were following the orders of Rebecca's psychiatrist, who had diagnosed the girl with bipolar disorder and attention deficit hyperactivity disorder.

House asks governor to drop appeal in land rule

HI HONOLULU — The state House is asking Gov. Linda Lingle to drop her appeal of a Hawaii Supreme Court ruling that barred the state from selling or transferring former monarchy lands until Native Hawaiian claims are resolved.

The request is in a nonbinding resolution the House overwhelmingly passed. The measure has been approved by the Senate.

Lingle has rebuffed previous entreaties. She contends the state must confirm it has clear title to the 1.2 million acres ceded to it by the federal government in 1959 at statehood.

Grounded oil tanker transferring cargo

TX GALVESTON — One-third of the cargo on a grounded 800-foot oil tanker has been transferred to another vessel in an attempt to free the stranded tanker, Coast Guard officials said.

The cargo was being moved in hopes that the tanker, which ran aground 22 miles off the coast of the Gulf of Mexico, will become light enough and float again.

"We're taking into consideration the safety of the people and environment. We haven't really put a timetable on this. We're just taking it at a good pace until we get the ship floated," Coast Guard spokeswoman Renee Aiello said. She said there had been no reports of any injuries.

Escapee surrenders after day on the lam

MS COLUMBIA — The last of eight prisoners who authorities say escaped from a south Mississippi jail by chipping through a wall has turned himself in.

Marion County Sheriff Berkeley Hall says Eric Ball, 19, turned himself in at the sheriff's office a day after the escape.

Hall says Ball had been hiding out in the community of Harmony, about two miles north of Columbia.

AMERICAN ROUNDUP

Authorities say the group somehow managed to fashion a chisel out of a piece of a bed and chip away at the wall over time to escape. The sheriff believes the escape might have been easier because razor wire on the jail's south side was taken down for construction.

Auditor faults education on procurement process

HI HONOLULU — State Auditor Marion Higa is faulting the state Department of Education for lack of leadership and controls over its procurement process.

Higa said the problem has led to indifference toward procurement compliance among department personnel.

The department's Office of School Facilities and Support Services was singled out for particular criticism.

Higa says a procurement audit discovered practices within the office that appear to be fraudulent and unethical.

She also says the office's regular outsourcing of large-dollar programs and construction management contracts appears to be inefficient and wasteful.

Iradell Crumpton of Newark was given the sentence after pleading no contest to murder and aggravated murder in an agreement with prosecutors.

Licking County Prosecutor Ken Oswalt says the deal gives families closure.

The victims, shot to death at a duplex in Newark, were Misty Butts, 21, James Bryant, 22, and John Boyce, 48. Police have said Trevor William Allen Moore, Butts' then 13-month-old son, was found physically unharmed at the home.

Authorities believe the 32-year-old Crumpton went there seeking revenge related to a drug deal.

Second thong-wearing robber gets four years

CO DENVER — The second of two Colorado men who used women's thong underwear to cover their faces while robbing an Arvada convenience store has been sentenced to four years in prison.

Joseph Richard Espinoza, 25, pleaded guilty to robbery on Aug. 11.

The Jefferson County district attorney's office says Espinoza and Joaquin Rico, 20, threw a rock through a window of the store on May 15 and climbed inside.

The men were wearing brightly colored thongs on their heads that barely covered their noses, mouths and chins.

Rico yelled at the clerk and hit her in the face several times, breaking her jaw. He then grabbed about $100 out of the cash registers, while Espinoza stole 37 packs of cigarettes.

Chinatown apartment blaze leaves one dead

NY NEW YORK — A blaze in a six-story apartment building in Manhattan's Chinatown has killed one person.

Fire officials say another 21 people were injured, including two firefighters.

The injured were taken to Bellevue Hospital and Beth Israel Medical Center.

There was no word on the cause of the fire.

State regulators ban trendy fish pedicure

FL TALLAHASSEE — A trendy pedicure that lets fish nibble dead skin from the feet has been nipped in the bud by Florida regulators.

The Florida Board of Cosmetology has banned the procedure, even before it was known to be offered anywhere in the state. The board said salons had been inquiring about its legality and decided to issue the decision before it became a problem.

The treatment is popular in Asia and has spread to some U.S. cities. A client sticks feet, hands or other body parts in a bowl or pool, and the small fish chow down on soft decaying skin.

Texas, Washington, Massachusetts and New Hampshire have also outlawed the practice.

Guilty plea in sex-related charges at day care

MO FARMINGTON — A man pleaded guilty to seven sex-related charges for molesting children as young as an infant at a day care business his wife operated out of their home.

William Huck, 62, a retired railroad worker who had no criminal record, was arrested in March 2007. He had been scheduled for trial but agreed to plead guilty instead.

The victims included five boys and two girls, ranging in age from an infant to a 5-year-old between 1998 and 2007, but authorities have said Huck admitted to molesting up to 40 children over three decades.

The victims attended the day care operated by his wife at the family's home in Ste. Genevieve, about 50 miles south of St. Louis. According to police reports, the abuse happened during times when Huck's wife was away from the center.

Ste. Genevieve County prosecutor Tim Inman said Huck's wife cooperated in the investigation and wasn't charged.

Police chief fired for alleged insubordination

GA DECATUR — DeKalb County Chief Executive Officer Burrell Ellis has fired the county's police chief, Terrell Bolton.

Bolton has denied the insubordination charges.

The firing will set off a merit system appeal and possibly a court battle. Bolton's lawyer said firing Bolton could violate federal law since the chief is on medical leave.

Bolton was fired as Dallas police chief in 2003 following a four-year tenure marked by a fake drug scandal, lawsuits by demoted commanders and controversy over hiring practices.

Ellis said he is confident DeKalb County will prevail against any legal action.

Paraplegic says his custom car was stolen

MI DETROIT — A paraplegic man says his customized hand-controlled car was stolen after being dropped at the wrong Detroit address. Two companies involved in the delivery from California blame each other.

Walter Simon, 34, told the Detroit Free Press he paid $1,500 to ship the Lincoln Mark VIII after his move.

Simon supplied a phone number but later got a new one. A driver for Preferred Trucking in Elk Grove Village, Ill., called the old number and was given a different Detroit address for the delivery.

Preferred Trucking spokeswoman Amelita Redzic defends the driver and blames the company Simon first contacted, Dallas-based Dependable Auto Shippers Inc. Dependable's Erin Almand says it functioned like a travel agent.

Missing teacher, male student found

WV MORGANTOWN — A Massachusetts school teacher was behind bars on a kidnapping charge in West Virginia after police found her at a motel with a 15-year-old boy whose parents had complained about their relationship.

Lisa Lavoie, 24, appeared before a Monongalia County magistrate by videoconference from the North Central Regional Jail near Flatwoods, in central West Virginia. She was ordered held without bond because kidnapping in West Virginia carries a possible life sentence, said State Police Cpl. T.W. Goodnight.

Lavoie has been a teacher in Holyoke for five months and has been placed on paid administrative leave.

Family living in cave puts house up on eBay

MO ST. LOUIS — In a twist to the U.S. housing crisis, a family that has been living in a home built inside a cave in suburban St. Louis has put it up for sale on eBay.

Bidding starts at $300,000.

Curt and Deborah Sleeper of Festus bought about 3 acres of property and a cave in Festus in 2004, after they spotted it on the Internet. The couple built a three-bedroom home inside the one-time mining cave. A large payment is due soon, and the Sleepers are trying to secure private financing. If they are able to, they may not sell. They're not accepting financial donations.

Their youngest child, Theodore Wesley, was born at their home over the weekend.

Murder charge against ex-inmate dropped

NY NEW YORK — A judge in New York has dismissed all charges against a man who spent 11 years in prison for a murder he did not commit.

Justice William Mogelescu granted the Bronx district attorney's motion and threw out the charges against 34-year-old Michael Clancy of Pelham Bay. The elevator repairman was arrested in March 1997 in the killing of John Buono. He was sentenced to 25 years to life in prison.

The conviction was overturned last April after an informant told authorities he was present when another man killed Buono. Defense lawyer Ronald Kuby says a second informant later confirmed Clancy's innocence.

Proposal to name state berry is squished

OR SALEM — Put in a jam by one sour response, Oregon lawmakers are chucking a plan to designate a state berry.

Resolution sponsors and the Oregon Raspberry and Blackberry Commission wanted to honor the marionberry. The sweet blackberry variety was bred at Oregon State University and grows almost exclusively in Marion County.

Other berry interests — rasp, blue and straw — assented, but a grower of another blackberry variety objected. The Oregonian newspaper reported the commission then backed down.

Rep. Vicki Berger yanked her resolution. Given stickier economic issues to tackle, she says she's "not going to bat over internal disputes in the berry community."

Donations make couple uneasy

Dear Abby: My husband, "Dwight," was very ill a few years ago.

Some wonderful folks held a fundraiser to help us with bills and unpaid leave.

We paid all of the outstanding medical bills and living expenses with a large portion of the money; the remainder has been set aside for an organ transplant Dwight will need a few years down the road.

We are extremely grateful to everyone who put forth the time and effort, as well as those who donated money.

Dwight is now in remission, and we are both back to our full-time jobs.

Over the last three years, the only time we have taken for ourselves is a couple of long weekends.

Our home is old and we've had to replace some windows and do some minor repairs.

Our car is 10 years old and still runs fine, but eventually we will have to buy another one.

I'm afraid that people who helped us may think we are squandering their gift if we take a vacation or buy a car.

Even when we repaired our home, we felt guilty.

My husband is healthy right now, and we would like to enjoy ourselves before things change again.

The last thing we want to do is hurt anyone's feelings or jeopardize our friendships. Would you please share your thoughts on this?

— Living in a Glass House

Dear Abby

Dear Living: In a situation like yours, appearances DO matter. People are extremely sensitive these days about money that is intended for one purpose being spent on another.

If you haven't already done so, to avoid any misunderstandings, put what remains of the donated monies into a separate interest-bearing account earmarked for your husband's transplant.

This will enable you to live your lives.

Should anyone second-guess you, explain that you are taking the vacation or buying the next car with your earnings, and that the funds that were donated will eventually be used for the purpose for which they were intended.

Letters for this column — with your name and phone number — should be addressed to Dear Abby, P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles CA 90069. Readers can write to Abby on the Internet at <http://www.ueexpress.com/dearabby> Universal Press Syndicate

WIN YOUR SIGNED COPY!

Stripes Book Club, Dutton, and Penguin Group (USA) Inc. are proud to offer you a chance to win a signed copy of Trevor Paglen's adventurous, insightful, and often chilling story of a young geographer's road trip through the underworld of U.S. military and CIA "Black Ops" sites. Paglen's research into areas that officially "don't exist" leads him on a globe-trotting adventure into a vast black empire — the unmarked spots on the map, where the U.S. military conducts its most clandestine operations.

"Trevor Paglen set out to map the darkest corners of the U.S. national security apparatus. He's done that and more. The result is a fascinating, deeply troubling, and absolutely essential book."

NHL roundup

Flyers come back, again get best of Caps

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Alex Ovechkin finally figured out the Philadelphia Flyers.

The Flyers, though, still know how to get the best of Ovechkin's Washington Capitals, and they managed to do it this time with a three-goals-in-five-shots spurt during the third period.

"We just felt that if we kept skating, kept pucks deep, make them turn and go back," Philadelphia coach John Stevens said, "good things would happen."

Did they ever.

After Ovechkin's assist and league-high 44th goal — his first points of the season against Philadelphia — gave Washington the lead, the Flyers came back behind Jeff Carter and Scott Hartnell to beat the Capitals 4-2 Tuesday night.

"We kind of lost our head there in the third. We didn't play smart defensively. We were running around a little bit," Washington forward Boyd Gordon said. "They've got a lot of skill up front. They've got guys that'll take advantage of it, and they definitely did."

Carter entered the night having gone a season-worst five games without a goal.

Stevens juggled his lines, but then decided to go back to Carter's usual setup in the third period, with Hartnell and Joffrey Lupul. It worked.

Philadelphia tied it 9:11 into the final period on Hartnell's 22nd goal, off assists from Lupul and Carter. Then, 1:25 later, Carter's 35th goal — with assists from Lupul and Hartnell — put Philadelphia ahead for the first time.

"They played well. They've been playing well all year," Flyers forward Mike Richards said. "You're going to go up and down sometimes throughout the year; you're not always going to get the breaks. (They are) three veteran players that have been through a lot of hockey games and stepped up when we really needed them."

Canadiens 3, Canucks 0: At Montreal, Jaroslav Halak made 34 saves for his first shutout of the season and Tomas Plekanec had a goal and an assist for the Canadiens.

Plekanec scored his 16th goal late in the first period and set up Andrei Markov's power-play goal in the second. Maxim Lapierre scored into an empty net with 5.8 seconds remaining.

Roberto Luongo stopped 14 shots for Vancouver, which ended a four-game winning streak.

Kings 2, Wild 1 (SO): At St. Paul, Minn., Drew Doughty scored the deciding shootout goal and Jonathan Quick denied Brent Burns, the Wild's final shooter, to seal it for Los Angeles.

Jack Johnson scored for the Kings and Antti Miettinen for the Wild in regulation.

Blues 2, Coyotes 1: At St. Louis, Jay McClement scored short-handed for the go-ahead goal, spoiling a four-minute Coyotes power play in the second period.

HARAZ N. GHANBARI/AP

Philadelphia goalie Antero Niittymäki keeps his eyes on the puck as Washington left wing Alex Ovechkin, right, advances toward the goal during the second period of Tuesday's game in Washington.

St. Louis improved to 26-26-8, reaching the .500 mark for the first time since Dec. 10, and has two victories and an overtime loss in the last three games despite scoring only four goals.

Shane Doan scored his 250th career goal for Phoenix, which has lost 10 of 13.

Flames 4, Blue Jackets 1: At Calgary, Alberta, Jarome Iginla scored twice and added two assists and Mike Cammalleri had a goal and two assists for the Flames.

Iginla has four goals in his last four games after a stretch in which he scored just twice in 19 games.

Calgary opened a 10-point lead over Vancouver in the Northwest Division.

R.J. Umberger scored for Columbus.

Oilers 5, Lightning 3: At Edmonton, Alberta, Sheldon Souray scored twice and the Oilers snapped a three-game skid. Erik Cole, Jason Strudwick and Andrew Coglianore also scored for Edmonton.

Cory Murphy had two goals and Steven Stamkos also scored for the Lightning, who have lost five of their last six.

Ducks 3, Sabres 2: At Buffalo, N.Y., Jean-Sebastien Giguere stopped 34 shots against the injury-depleted Sabres.

Todd Marchant, with a short-handed goal, and Mike Brown scored in the second period to break open a game tied at 1. Teemu Selanne also scored for the Ducks, who snapped a five-game winless streak at Buffalo (0-3-2).

Ales Kotalik had a goal and an assist, and Paul Gaustad scored for Buffalo, which was playing its first game without starting goaltender Ryan Miller, out indefinitely after spraining his left ankle Saturday.

Bruins 6, Panthers 1: At Boston, rookie fourth-line winger Byron Bitz scored his second and third NHL goals in the opener of the Bruins' six-game homestand.

Michael Ryder, returning from a seven-game absence after surgery to repair facial fractures, had a goal and an assist for the Bruins, who won only their second in eight games.

Kamil Kreps scored for Florida.

Thrashers 4, Avalanche 3: At Atlanta, Ilya Kovalchuk got his 10th goal in eight games, and the Thrashers had two short-handed scores to win for just the fifth time in their last 21 games at Philips Arena.

Kovalchuk's 31st goal was a re-direction 4:07 into the game. The Thrashers captain has 28 points, including 20 goals, in the last 24 games.

Milan Hejduk had his 21st and 22nd goals for Colorado, which has lost six of nine.

Senators 4, Hurricanes 2: At Ottawa, Dany Heatley reached the 30-goal mark for the fourth straight time and fifth in his seven NHL seasons to lead the Senators.

Heatley and Chris Kelly scored goals 46 seconds apart in the first period for Ottawa.

Mike Comrie, acquired from the New York Islanders in a trade last Friday, also scored as the Senators struck three times in the opening 20 minutes to chase Carolina goalie Cam Ward.

Patrick Eaves and Anton Babchuk scored for Carolina, which had its three-game winning streak stopped.

NBA roundup

Rockets top Trail Blazers, continue surge up standings

The Associated Press

HOUSTON — The Houston Rockets are relying on a familiar formula to climb up the Western Conference standings.

"Moving it [the ball] and playing hard on defense," Ron Artest said. "That's our identity right now."

Artest scored 21 points, Aaron Brooks had 20 and the Rockets moved past Portland in the West with a 98-94 victory over the Trail Blazers on Tuesday night.

Houston has won eight straight home games and five straight overall, both season bests.

Not so coincidentally, the Rockets have had at least 20 assists in their past five games after getting 20 on Tuesday night. They held their previous four opponents under 90 points, and Portland didn't get to 90 until the final minute.

Luis Scola had 15 points and 11 rebounds — his fifth straight double-double — for Houston, which came in trailing Portland by a half-game for fourth place in the conference.

The Rockets have mostly beaten teams with losing records lately, and felt a little more satisfied after this victory.

"We're going in the right direction," Scola said. "We have a lot of space to improve and things will get better, but this is definitely the way we want to play."

Brandon Roy scored 24 and LaMarcus Aldridge added 21 points with eight rebounds for the Blazers, who've lost nine of their past 10 games in Houston.

The Rockets seemed to have the victory in hand after Kyle Lowry's layup with 8:31 left put Houston up 89-75.

But Aldridge converted a three-point play and added a jumper to start a 13-3 run. Yao Ming gave away his fifth turnover before Travis Outlaw's three-pointer and driving layup cut Houston's lead to 91-88.

The Rockets missed six straight shots, but the Blazers couldn't take full advantage. Steve Blake missed a three-pointer, Outlaw couldn't score on a drive and Aldridge missed a shot from the wing in the final two minutes.

Roy scored twice in the final 22 seconds, but the Rockets put the game away from the free-throw line to end the Blazers' three-game winning streak.

Spurs 93, Mavericks 76: At San Antonio, Tony Parker had 37 points and 12 assists with All-Star teammate Tim Duncan sitting out with a sore right knee, and the short-handed Spurs held Dallas to its worst offensive showing this season.

Parker scored 26 points in the first half and shouldered the load without Duncan and Manu Ginobili, who hasn't played since the All-Star break because of a stress reaction in his right ankle.

Josh Howard scored 19 points and 12 rebounds for Orlando.

The Houston Rockets' Ron Artest, left, runs into the Portland Trail Blazers' Nicholas Batum during the second half Tuesday night in Houston. Artest scored 21 points in the Rockets' 98-94 victory.

Heat 103, Pistons 91: Dwyane Wade scored 31 points and had a career-high 16 assists, and host Miami handed Detroit its seventh straight loss — the Pistons' longest slide in more than seven years.

Allen Iverson scored 22 points and Tayshaun Prince added 18 for the Pistons (27-28), who fell under .500 this late in a season for the first time since 2000-01.

Lakers 107, Thunder 93: Kobe Bryant scored 10 of his 36 points in a 3-minute span of the fourth quarter and moved ahead of Adrian Dantley into 19th place on the NBA's career scoring list.

Kevin Durant scored 32 to lead host Oklahoma City.

Bulls 120, Magic 102: Derrick Rose scored 22 points and host Chicago got strong efforts from its newcomers while scoring the most points given up by Orlando this season.

The three Bulls acquired at the trade deadline combined for 37 points in their home debuts. Tim Thomas scored 17 points, John Salmons 11 and Brad Miller had nine points.

Dwight Howard had 26 points and 12 rebounds for Orlando.

Suns 112, Bobcats 102: At Phoenix, Steve Nash scored 22 points despite leaving with an ankle injury and the Suns spoiled the return of Boris Diaw and Raja Bell to US Airways Center.

Diaw finished with a season-high 27 points, along with nine rebounds and six assists. Bell scored 23 with three rebounds and three assists. They were traded to Charlotte two months ago.

Cavaliers 94, Grizzlies 79: Daniel Gibson scored 19 points and Mo Williams added 18 as host Cleveland won while playing again without Delonte West, who was resting his sore wrist.

LeBron James scored 15 points in 30 minutes and didn't play the fourth quarter, thanks to Cleveland's big lead.

Rudy Gay and Hakim Warrick scored 13 points apiece for Memphis, which lost its fifth straight.

Raptors 118, Timberwolves 100: Chris Bosh and Andrea Bargnani each scored 26 points, Anthony Parker had 24, and host Toronto beat Minnesota for the 10th consecutive time.

Randy Foye scored 25 and Ryan Gomes had 23 for the Timberwolves, who have lost 11 of 13.

Mariners' Bedard tests repaired shoulder

Pitcher month ahead in recovery

The Associated Press

PEORIA, Ariz. — The Seattle Mariners' Erik Bedard passed his first brief test in his comeback from shoulder surgery, allowing only a groundball single during a scoreless inning in an intrasquad game Tuesday.

He then declared himself healthy and ready to pitch Friday in an exhibition game against the Los Angeles Dodgers.

Bedard threw 12 pitches, six to Bryan LaHair, before he struck out the reserve first baseman to end his short morning.

"It was pretty good," Bedard said of his first work against hitters since surgery Sept. 26 to remove a cyst from his pitching shoulder and cut away some tissue.

Bedard is one month ahead of the typical, six-month recovery time from that procedure.

Asked if he felt healthy, Bedard said, "Yep."

The left-hander went 6-4 with a 3.67 ERA in 15 starts last season before the surgery. He didn't make a start after July 4.

A year ago, the Mariners traded five top prospects — including George Sherrill, a closer they could now use — to the Baltimore Orioles for Bedard.

He and the Mariners agreed last month on a $7.75 million, one-year contract that gave Bedard a raise of $750,000 and avoided salary arbitration. He is eligible for free agency after this season.

Bedard's raise could total more than $1.3 million if he stays healthy in 2009. He can make $600,000 in performance bonuses: $75,000 for 150 innings, $100,000 for 165 innings, $150,000 for 180 innings, $125,000 for 195 innings and $150,000 for 205 innings.

That all looks possible — so far.

"He said it was great. Everything's good," Mariners manager Don Wakamatsu said of Bedard's outing Tuesday.

Bedard began throwing during the second week of December in his garage at his home near Navan, Ontario, off his portable plastic mound. By the first of the year, Bedard said the scar tissue had loosened and he felt pain-free, as he has since. He said his shoulder troubles are completely out of his mind.

Asked this month what the difference is between now and last year, he said simply: "It just doesn't hurt."

■ At Unedin, Fla., in his first game since admitting he used a banned substance, Alex Rodriguez was booed and responded with a home run.

The New York Yankees slugger opened the spring training season with a two-run homer and two walks at the Toronto Blue Jays' ballpark in Dunedin.

There were a lot of cheers, a smattering of boos and occasional cat calls from hecklers Wednesday.

■ At Port St. Lucie, Fla., Mets starter John Maine also cleared a hurdle, pitching in a game for the first time since September surgery to shave a bone spur in his right shoulder.

Maine, whose 2008 season ended Aug. 23, started an intrasquad scrimmage and came out of it pain-free. He allowed one hit with two strikeouts and a walk in two scoreless innings, throwing 16 of 25 pitches for strikes.

"My arm feels great. My body feels great," Maine said. "I just feel like it's been such a long time. The mechanics are a little off and I was rusty a little bit, but other than that, and more importantly, my arm feels good."

■ At Surprise, Ariz., Andruw Jones homered and doubled in his only at-bats during Texas' intrasquad game, the team's final tuneup before Wednesday's Cactus League opener.

"We've been working on things to get the bad habits out of my swing and getting on a good pace," said Jones, a former Atlanta star who is trying to find a spot in an already crowded Texas outfield.

Jones, who hit .158 with three homers in an injury-riddled 2008 season, is with the Rangers on a $500,000 minor league contract that includes a chance to earn an additional $1 million in performance bonuses.

But first, he has to make the team.

"I'm happy to see him swinging the bat and happy to see him running around playing defense," Rangers manager Ron Washington said. "Tomorrow we start for real and we'll see how things go."

The Rangers said Kris Benson, signed to a minor league contract Saturday, will start against the Royals. The 34-year-old Benson hasn't pitched in the majors since 2006.

Because spring training is longer than usual this year due to the World Baseball Classic, many teams plan to hold back their stars — especially starting pitchers — during the first week of games.

■ At Kissimmee, Fla., the Atlanta Braves completed a $2.5 million, one-year contract with outfielder Garret Anderson after he passed a physical.

The 36-year-old Anderson had spent his entire 15-year career with the Angels, where he made three All-Star appearances and batted .300 or better seven times.

"I have no idea what to expect," he said during a news conference at Atlanta's spring training stadium. "I went through three uniform changes, but Anaheim was always home. It will be different, but my chapter with the Angels is closed."

■ In other news, Minnesota right-hander Boof Bonser will have exploratory arthroscopic surgery on his ailing pitching shoulder, which has kept him off the mound since the start of spring training.

There won't be a timetable for Bonser's recovery until the results of the surgery are assessed.

■ At Tucson, Ariz., finally, Chad Tracy is having a routine spring training.

The knee surgery that sidelined him, and the subsequent blood clot that threatened his life, are history.

He enters the 2009 season healthy as the Arizona Diamondbacks' projected starter at first base, and for that he is grateful.

"These guys have let me try to get back to my form and haven't given up on me, which I appreciate," Tracy said after the team's workout Tuesday. "Hopefully, I don't let them down."

Arizona manager Bob Melvin called it "a big year" for Tracy. The muscular 28-year-old who once started at third base and played a bit in right field is in the final season of a three-year, $13.25 million contract. The club has an option to pay him $7 million for next season, and he is out to show his worth.

"He wants to be here," Melvin said, "he wants to be a Diamondback for a long period of time, and already has been."

Given Tracy's injury-plagued recent past, it's easy to forget that this left-handed hitting redhead was once considered the young foundation of the Diamondbacks' offense. He hit .305 with 27 home runs in 2005, warming up in the last 25 games to bat .375 with seven doubles, seven homers, two triples and 25 RBIs. In 2006, he hit .281 with 20 homers and a career-best 80 RBIs.

He was struggling at the plate, trying too much to be a power hitter, in 2006, then came the problems with his right knee in 2007. In September of that year, Tracy underwent microfracture surgery. Later, doctors discovered a blood clot that, had it moved up from his leg, could have threatened his life.

Blood-thinning medication eventually resolved the problem, but Tracy's rehabilitation was set back significantly. Tracy appeared in 88 games last season, batting .267 with eight homers and 39 RBIs. His future in Arizona did not look bright.

"If you go back to this time of year, even throughout the season — the way things went toward the end — I couldn't see myself in this position right now," Tracy said, quickly adding. "Nothing's for sure and I'm not taking anything for granted."

■ At Phoenix, Edgar Gonzalez threw himself into the competition for a spot in the Oakland Athletics' rotation with a solid performance in an intrasquad game Tuesday.

Gonzalez, who spent the past six years with the Arizona Diamondbacks, tossed three innings against a group of hitters that included Jason Giambi, Matt Holliday, Travis Buck, Ryan Sweeney and Bobby Crosby.

"I just wanted to go pitch by pitch today," said Gonzalez, who pitched for Hermosillo in the Caribbean playoffs two weeks ago. "My curveball was a little flat and I made a couple of mistakes."

Buck had two of the three hits against Gonzalez.

"He looked sharp," Buck said. "He's around the zone and he knows how to pitch. Those are the kind of pitchers you like to face as a hitter."

Gonzalez was released by the Diamondbacks last year after spending the second half of the season on the disabled list with a right elbow sprain. He went 4-1 for Hermosillo in seven starts with a 4.46 ERA.

"I'm excited the A's gave me the opportunity to be here," said Gonzalez, who signed a minor league deal with the club on Feb. 9. "I want to fight for that fifth spot and if I'm not a starter, I'll be in the bullpen. Whatever they want, I'm ready for anything."

A's manager Bob Geren said Gonzalez threw nearly 100 pitches in the playoff game, and expected the right-hander to be sharp.

"I was impressed with Edgar," Geren said.

"He threw the ball well. He had good location, good movement and he changed speeds with his breaking ball pretty good."

Grady Sizemore

taken advantage of the proximity since November. His days in the desert this spring are numbered.

He's leaving Sunday for Clearwater, Fla., to join Team USA to begin preparing for the World Baseball Classic, which begins March 5 and runs through March 23. Depending on how far the Americans advance, Sizemore could miss several weeks of Indians camp. He was initially hesitant to play in the WBC, but didn't want to pass up the chance to represent his country.

Like all teams, the Indians have their concerns about having one of their stars participate in the international tournament.

There's always the risk of injury, but with Sizemore, that's always the case. A former high school football standout who was recruited by the University of Washington, Sizemore plays with a fearlessness that never subsides.

During a routine popup drill at camp a few days ago, Sizemore went full bore after a ball in right-center and collided with right fielder Shin-Soo Choo. Guess who got the worst of it? Choo limped away to the trainer's room with a bruised right knee.

Sizemore jogged back to his spot in center.

"I guess he didn't know I was a linebacker," Sizemore cracked.

It's Sizemore's all-or-nothing attitude and hustle that make him so endearing.

"It doesn't matter where he's playing. It could be a pickup game on a Little League field or in the World Series," Wedge said. "He's going to play the game the same way."

And if it was up to Sizemore, he would play every day.

He played in 382 successive games before his streak was snapped last April by a sprained ankle. Since 2005, Sizemore has played in at least 157 games every season.

Wedge thought Sizemore wore down in the second half last season, so he'd like to give his Gold Glove winner a few more off days in 2009.

Wedge has tried that before, only to have Sizemore respond with an incredulous, you're-not-serious look.

Sizemore can't handle arriving in the clubhouse, checking the lineup card and not seeing his name written in the leadoff spot.

"As long as I'm not hurt I want to be out there," said Sizemore, a horrible bench-warmer. "I pace in the dugout a lot. There's a lot of up-and-down movement. I change seats. It's not a comfortable feeling. It's tough when you're watching your boys play and you're not out there."

"It's also good for the body to take a day off, but that doesn't mean I'll ever accept it."

Sizemore has improved every aspect of his game since breaking in with the Indians in 2004. His power numbers, walks and stolen bases have risen. His arm has gotten stronger. He has become selective at the plate and a smarter base runner. His batting average dipped from a high of .290 in 2006 to .268 last season, but the slight slide hasn't sounded a alarm for Wedge.

"It (batting average) is somewhat of an overrated stat," he said. "There are so many other numbers that are more important to a team winning a ballgame. It doesn't worry me."

During individual meetings this spring, Wedge spoke with his players about areas in which they can improve. His meeting with Sizemore didn't take long.

No, Sizemore isn't flawless. But to the Indians, he's close.

"Usually you have an idea of how good somebody can be," Wedge said. "I just don't know with Grady."

Cleveland Indians center fielder Grady Sizemore, top, collides with right fielder Shin-Soo Choo while fielding fly balls during a spring training workout last weekend in Goodyear, Ariz.

Agent: Warner deserves pay of top quarterback

The Associated Press

The agent for Kurt Warner says he expected the quarterback and the Cardinals would have a contract agreement by now and hopes the team isn't using his client's desire to stay in Arizona against him.

Agent Mark Bartelstein said Warner deserves a salary among the top "four or five" quarterbacks in the league, no matter where he plays. According to Bartelstein, those five make an average of about $14.5 million per year.

In an interview with The Associated Press Tuesday night, Bartelstein declined to say what the Cardinals were offering.

"It's unfortunate," Bartelstein said. "I thought it would get done quickly, but it hasn't. We'll keep working on it."

Barring an agreement, Warner will become a free agent on Friday.

In an interview on Sporting News Radio, the 37-year-old quarterback said he was leaning toward either signing with Arizona or retiring.

At this point in his career, Warner said, "you don't want to go and start over, you don't want to have to rebuild. You want to be able to be a part of something you're comfortable with, where the pieces are in place to be successful."

Warner also doesn't want to move his wife and seven children.

His comments add to the leverage the Cardinals have in their negotiations, but Bartelstein said it would be unfair to pay the quarterback less than he deserves just because he wants to stay put.

"I really hope it doesn't get used against him that he's a Cardinal," the agent said.

Bartelstein downplayed Warner's comments, saying, "things change quickly. ... When the phone rings, you've got to listen."

Warner was a bargain last season, making about $4 million plus incentives at the controls of a prolific passing game that led the Cardinals on an improbable run to the Super Bowl.

In four playoff games, Warner completed 68 percent of his passes for 1,147 yards and 11 touchdowns, with three interceptions.

Warner wants a deal for two years with a possible option for a third. Both he and his agent were keenly aware that in the current economic downturn there is little public sympathy for an athlete arguing over a few million dollars.

"The last Kurt or I want is for anyone to feel sorry for him," Bartelstein said. "That's not his or my style."

Last of Vick co-defendants released from prison

RICHMOND, Va. — All of Michael Vick's dogfighting co-defendants have been released from federal prison.

Only the suspended Atlanta Falcons star remains behind bars. Vick is serving a 23-month prison term at the federal penitentiary in Leavenworth, Kan., and is due to be released July 20.

Quanis Phillips, who like Vick pleaded guilty to a federal dogfighting conspiracy, was released from federal prison Friday, according to the U.S. Bureau of Prisons Web site. Purnell Peace and Tony Taylor had previously been released.

Phillips, Peace and Taylor still face state dogfighting charges in Surry County Circuit Court. Vick pleaded guilty to one state dogfighting count in November and was given a three-year suspended sentence.

Knicks, Marbury part ways

NEW YORK — The New York Knicks are free of Stephen Marbury, and the troublesome point guard is free to join a playoff contender.

Marbury was waived Tuesday by the Knicks, ending a turbulent five-year stint in which the former All-Star couldn't lead his hometown team to a playoff victory.

The team released a statement saying an agreement between the Knicks and Marbury had been reached, but did not disclose financial terms. Knicks president Donnie Walsh has said the team and Marbury have been trying to work out a buyout.

Walsh's hope was to get something for Marbury in a trade, but with Marbury's salary of close to $21 million this season and a divisive personality, he knew a deal was improbable.

Marbury would be eligible for the playoffs with any team that signs him because he was waived by March 1. He has been linked to the Boston Celtics, who are in need of a backup guard with Tony Allen injured.

Elsewhere around the NBA:

■ The Celtics on Tuesday signed free agent forward Mikki Moore. The 7-foot, 225-pound Moore was waived by the Sacramento Kings last week. He spent part of the 2002-2003 season with the Celtics.

■ Gilbert Arenas has been practicing full-speed with the Washington Wizards for more than a week as he works his way back from his latest knee surgery.

■ Portland Trail Blazers center Greg Oden will miss at least two more games because of a bone chip in his left knee.

Schiano will no longer oversee Rutgers' defense

PISCATAWAY, N.J. — Rutgers coach Greg Schiano is giving up his defensive coordinator duties.

Schiano announced Tuesday that he is promoting two as-

Bob Fraser, who has been linebackers coach, and Ed Pinkham, who handled the secondary, will be co-defensive coordinators.

Kirk Ciarrocca, who was wide receivers coach, and Kyle Flood, who was offensive line coach, were named offensive co-coordinators.

Ciarrocca will also coach the quarterbacks and Flood will continue as assistant head coach.

Schiano had served as defensive coordinator since 2005.

Devils' Brodeur to return to lineup Thursday

NEWARK, N.J. — New Jersey Devils goaltender Martin Brodeur will make his first start since missing nearly four months with an elbow injury.

The Devils play the Colorado Avalanche on Thursday night.

The 36-year-old Brodeur was informed of the team's decision Wednesday after getting the majority of work for the third straight practice.

Brodeur was hurt in a game against Atlanta on Nov. 1, and had surgery days later to repair a torn biceps muscle in his left elbow.

Brodeur has won four Vezina trophies as the NHL's top goaltender, including last year. He is on the verge of surpassing Patrick Roy's NHL record for career wins.

Peavy, Oswalt lead U.S. rotation for WBC

NEW YORK — It's going to be awfully crowded out there in the bullpen.

Final rosters for the second World Baseball Classic were released Tuesday, with Jake Peavy, Roy Oswalt and Joe Nathan highlighting a 14-man U.S. pitching staff that includes 10 major league relievers.

Nathan, an All-Star closer for the Minnesota Twins, figures to anchor an accomplished bullpen that also features B.J. Ryan, Brian Fuentes, Jonathan Broxton and Scot Shields.

Peavy and Oswalt headline the rotation, with Ted Lilly and Jeremy Guthrie rounding out the back end. Team USA, managed by Davey Johnson, will play a maximum of eight games in a span of 17 days next month, making four starters sufficient.

Alex Rodriguez was included on the Dominican Republic's roster — as expected. Rodriguez, who recently admitted using performance-enhancing drugs from 2001-03, played for the United States during the inaugural WBC three years ago.

Dustin Pedroia, Derek Jeter and Grady Sizemore are among the offensive stars who will try to help the U.S. improve on its 2006 finish, when it was knocked out in the second round. Japan beat Cuba in the championship game.

Players will leave their big league teams and report to U.S. camp Sunday in Clearwater, Fla. The tournament begins March 5 in Tokyo, and the United States plays its first game March 7 against Canada in Toronto.

Each of the 16 teams in the WBC can carry 28 players, but the U.S. took only 27. The list was pared down from 43 players submitted on its provisional roster that was announced last month.

Derrek Lee, Evan Longoria and Shane Victorino were among those on the provisional roster who were left off the final one.

J.P. Howell, Matt Lindstrom, J.J. Putz, Matt Thornton and Brad Ziegler fill out the U.S. bullpen.

Jeter was already anointed the starting shortstop, with Jimmy Rollins in a backup role. David Wright and Chipper Jones could share time at third base, with Kevin Youkilis at first and Pedroia at second.

Sizemore is joined in the outfield by Ryan Braun, Curtis Granderson and Brad Hawpe. Mark DeRosa was chosen for a utility role.

Brian McCann and Chris Iannetta are the U.S. catchers.

Tejada won't play in WBC

KISSIMMEE, Fla. — Miguel Tejada will not play for the Dominican Republic in next month's World Baseball Classic.

Tejada and Astros manager Cecil Cooper said the Dominican team's request that the shortstop play first base during the tournament was a major factor in the decision.

"They've never seen me play first base," Tejada said. "I prefer to be sitting the bench and wait for a chance to play short or another position, but not first base."

IRL's Dixon off and running

HOMESTEAD, Fla. — Reigning champion Scott Dixon led the way Tuesday night on the first of two days of preseason testing for the IndyCar Series.

Dixon turned a fast lap of 211.372 mph to top the six-hour session under the lights at Homestead-Miami Speedway.

Team Penske's Ryan Briscoe was close behind at 210.793, followed at 210.603 by 2007 series champ Dario Franchitti, newly returned from an aborted run in NASCAR to join Dixon at Target Chip Ganassi Racing.

Israeli tennis player loses Dubai doubles match

DUBAI, United Arab Emirates — An Israeli player taking part in a controversial Dubai tournament a week after a fellow Israeli was barred from entering the country lost his opening match.

Andy Ram and his partner, Kevin Ullyett of Zimbabwe, lost to Kevin's Marat Safin and Spain's David Ferrer 6-3, 2-6, 10-8.

Ram's appearance comes a week after another Israeli player, Shahar Peer, was barred from entering the country to play in the women's tournament.

At the time, organizers cited security concerns for the decision, which prompted widespread protests and pressure to allow Ram to compete.

Spectators watching Ram's match had to leave their belongings outside, and metal detectors were set outside the court.

Birdie-eagle start leads to 3-and-2 victory over Aussie

By DOUG FERGUSON

MARANA, Ariz. — Eight months after his last tournament, Tiger Woods looked as though he had never been away.

Woods made a triumphant return to golf Wednesday in the Accenture Match Play Championship with a spectacular start that showed golf what it had been missing in the 253 days since he limped his way to an epic U.S. Open title.

Just past high noon in the desert, Woods fired an 8-iron into 5 feet for birdie.

Then came a gentle fist pump when his approach to the par-5 second settled 4 feet from the cup for eagle.

He closed Brendan Jones of Australia with a 3-foot par on the 16th hole for a 3-and-2 victory.

Woods poured it on late, eagling the par-5 13th hole to go 4-up with five holes to play. Jones had little chance on a day when Woods was as hot as the desert sun.

The world's No. 1 player said he looked forward to the rush of competition, something he had not experienced since he won the U.S. Open in a playoff June 16 on one good leg. He had season-ending surgery on his left knee a week later.

Fans packed into the stands around the first tee, with more lined up behind the ropes to the green, and the cheer when Woods walked onto the tee could be heard all the way down the fairway.

Woods backed off his tee shot, and without much expression, belted a fairway metal down the right side of the fairway.

"You are back!" one spectator shouted.

From 167 yards, Woods hit an 8-iron toward the middle of the green that caught a ridge and stopped 5 feet from the hole. He converted for birdie to go 1 up. The par-5 second was even better, as Woods watched his second shot and offered a gentle fist pump when it stopped 4 feet from the hole. He never had to make his eagle putt when Jones settled for par.

So much for the rust — at least early.

Woods found the bunker on the par-3 third, the ball on a slight downslope leaving him no chance to get it close. He wound up with a bogey to halve the hole, and didn't look nearly as crisp for the rest of the front nine.

Jones cut into the lead when Woods came up short of the seventh green and made birdie, then Woods answered with a 6-foot birdie on the eighth. He was 2 up heading to the back nine.

The gallery hustled through the desert to watch every shot, missing some entertaining golf around the rest of Dove Mountain. Three days after Phil Mickelson blew a lead and rallied to win at the Northern Trust Open, he did it again.

Mickelson was 4 up with five holes to play when former U.S. Open champion Angel Cabrera won the next four holes — three with birdies — to force overtime. Mickelson won on the 19th hole.

Anthony Kim never lost a hole against Lin Wen-tang, beating him 7 and 5. Camilo Villegas had the shortest day at The Ritz-Carlton Golf Club, hammering Rod Pampling of Australia, 7 and 6.

Trevor Immelman got off to the best start, holing out with a 9-iron for eagle on the opening hole. But the Masters champion wound up losing when Shingo Katayama fired three birdies and an eagle on the back nine, winning 3 and 2.

No. 1 Pitt takes beating at Providence

The Associated Press

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — Pittsburgh lost its first game since being elevated to the No. 1 spot in the rankings and opened the door for Providence to make the NCAA tournament.

The Panthers fell behind 15-4, failed to score for six minutes at the end of the first half and then saw reigning Big East player of the week DeJuan Blair foul out in the final minute as Providence led wire-to-wire in an 81-73 victory Tuesday night.

"I didn't recognize us," Pitt coach Jamie Dixon said. "We've got high standards, and we didn't live up to them tonight. That's obvious."

The Friars were coming off a 19-point loss to Notre Dame that might have eliminated their hopes of an NCAA berth. But with a signature victory — their first over a top-ranked team since 1976 — and a virtual lock on a winning record in the tough Big East, the Friars might have salvaged their postseason.

"We're in a pretty good situation: we're in the top half of the best conference in the country," coach Keno Davis said. "It puts us in the conversation. I'm sure if we had lost, they wouldn't be talking about us anymore."

Weyinmi Efejuku scored 16 points and Sharaud Curry added 15 for the Friars (17-11, 9-7), and Geoff McDermott had 11 points, six assists and three of Providence's 11 steals. Blair had 17 points and eight rebounds, and Sam Young had 16 points and eight rebounds for Pitt, which had won seven straight.

Blair was named Big East player of the week after averaging 21 points and 20.5

rebounds in victories over then-No. 1 Connecticut and DePaul last week. He picked up two quick fouls — his third and fourth — midway through the second half, then his fifth with 46 seconds left after Pitt had a chance to make it a four-point game.

"He's a special player," Davis said. "You look and he got 17 points and eight boards and it's a down night."

Providence led by 20 points after scoring the first basket of the second half to complete a 17-1 run. The Panthers cut it to 75-70 on Blair's putback with 51 seconds left. After Brian McKenzie hit two free throws for Providence a fraction of a second later, Pitt brought the ball down and Blair was called for an offensive foul.

The fans in the Dunkin' Donuts Center crowded around the courtside press tables for the final minutes. Twice, the public address announcer begged the fans to stay off the court following the game; twice the crowd responded by laughing.

No. 18 LSU 81, Florida 75: At Baton Rouge, La., Marcus Thornton scored 32 points to help LSU clinch a share of the Southeastern Conference championship. The Tigers (24-4, 12-1) have won nine consecutive overall and 12 in a row in SEC play. They can win their second outright conference title in the past four seasons with one victory in their last three games. Walter Hodge paced the Gators (21-7, 8-5) with 16 points.

Boston College 72, No. 23 Florida State 67: At Boston, Tyrese Rice hit a three-pointer with 20.5 seconds to play and Joe Trapani scored 19 points to lead Boston College (20-9, 8-6 Atlantic Coast Conference).

Governor calls Calhoun rant embarrassing

The Associated Press

NEW HAVEN, Conn. — Connecticut basketball coach Jim Calhoun's tirade at a freelance journalist posing questions about his $1.6 million salary was an "embarrassing display," the state's governor said Tuesday.

Gov. M. Jodi Rell said she believes Calhoun regrets the outburst directed at Ken Krayeske, who questioned the coach about his salary after a game Saturday.

"I think if Coach Calhoun had the opportunity right now, he would welcome a do-over and not have that embarrassing display from last week," Rell said.

Rell said Calhoun's whole tone was embarrassing. Calhoun hasn't spoken with the media since the tirade.

Krayeske, a freelancer and political activist, attended the game on a photo press pass and asked the first question of the coach's news conference after a 64-50 victory over South Florida.

He asked why the coach of a public university was making $1.6 million while the state has a $944 million deficit and a projected $8 billion shortfall over the next two years.

Calhoun first responded with a joke, then grew angry as Krayeske continued the line of questioning.

"My best advice to you is, shut up," Calhoun said.

"Quite frankly, we bring in $12 million to the university, nothing to do with state funds. We make $12 million a year for this university. Get some facts and come back and see me. ... Don't throw out salaries and other things."

GOODYEAR, Ariz.

All ballplayers have a statistical offensive ceiling, the intersection where potential collides with talent. Grady Sizemore might not have touched his limits.

Just 26 years old, Cleveland's supremely gifted All-Star center fielder has hit at least 20 homers and stolen 20 bases in each of his four full seasons in the majors. Last year, he hit 33 homers and stole 38 bases, becoming just the second Indians player and 10th in AL history in the 30-30 club.

Only four players — Jose Canseco, Barry Bonds, Alex Rodriguez and Alfonso Soriano — have recorded 40 homers and 40 steals in the same season.

The 40-40 fraternity is baseball's most select brotherhood.

Can Sizemore join it?

"Oh, yeah," Indians manager Eric Wedge said. "Anything is possible with Grady."

Sure seems that way. Sizemore, who tracks fly balls in center field with the tenacity of an NFL linebacker, is one of the game's most well-rounded players. With a rare blend of speed, power, drive, leadership and humility, the 6-foot-2, 200-pound Sizemore embodies everything the Indians want in a player.

"He's unlike any I've ever been around," said Wedge, in his seventh season with Cleveland. "For me, you have to compare him to the great ones."

Grady the Great.

His numbers might be impressive to outsiders, but Sizemore isn't satisfied. And it's that quest for perfection that makes him so good. Although other players might be content to hit, say, .275 with 30 doubles and 20 homers, Sizemore wants more.

"I try to improve on every aspect of my game every year," he said this week following a post-practice weightlifting session. "You try to build on what success you've had and you try to minimize your weaknesses, improve as much as you can on those and go from there. For me, it's everything from defensive work to base running to hitting."

A workout fiend, Sizemore has been fine-tuning his game for months. The Indians' new state-of-the-art training complex is less than an hour's drive from his home in Scottsdale, and Sizemore has
